SIR FREDERICK MADDEN, K.H., F.R.S.

KEEPER OF MSS. BRITISH MUSEUM,

THIS WORK

IS RESPECTFULLY DEDICATED,

BY HIS SON,

THE WRITER.
PREFACE.

The main object of the present work is to enable the collector of Roman coins to classify them in accordance with the latest discoveries. It will also serve as an introduction to the study of Roman Numismatics.

The plan followed is that of the Roman section of Akerman’s “Numismatic Manual,” which appeared twenty-one years ago. The details are, however, wholly different, as since that time very many new coins have been discovered, and others previously wrongly attributed have been placed to their rightful owners. Two books which have recently been published, the “Médailles Consulaires,” and “Médailles Impériales,” of M. Cohen, of the Bibliothèque Impériale at Paris, have rendered all former works out of date. They are, however, so large and costly, that it has seemed desirable to attempt a compendium that would be both a book for the pocket, and of no great cost, while affording, as far as possible, all the information that the collector may desire.

The list of the Imperial series includes all the new attributions that have been discovered up to the present time, and is, as far as possible, chronological.

The second list of the Family series is wholly new, and will be found of great service to the student of this interesting branch.

The chronological list, from the accession of Diocletian to the death of Theodosius, will show at once the most important events of that period, and also the divisions of the empire, which at that time are excessively confused.

Before I conclude these brief remarks, I must return my sincere thanks to Mr. J. F. W. de Salis, whose great knowledge of this branch of Numismatics, gained in the formation of his splendid collection, which he has most liberally given to the British Museum, without relinquishing his constant and persevering study of all accessible material, has enabled him to form a classification of the Roman series that is far superior to any previously attempted. To him I do return my best thanks for the courteous and obliging manner in which he has at all times answered my inquiries.

To my colleague, Mr. R. S. Poole, I offer thanks for many suggestions as to the arrangement of the work.

The plates are drawn by Mr. Henry Bellars, and lithographed by Messrs. Ashbee and Dangefield.

ROMAN NUMISMATICS.

The following introductory remarks are intended to elucidate the chief general questions in Roman Numismatics, and, principally, the early history of the coinage in the three metals, the character of the types, the chronological indications, in which we must include various matters relating to the office of consul, and certain titles or inscriptions of constant or frequent occurrence.

I. COINAGE.

§ 1. Copper and Brass Coinage.

The first issue of copper money is usually attributed to Servius Tullius, from the statement of Pliny (N. H. xxxiii. 13); but we have nothing that can be considered earlier than the third century, B.C. The first coin, which was originally of a pound weight, was the "As,"
and was in consequence called "As Libralis." Its divisions and multiples are given in the next section. We pass over its rapid reduction to the time of the family coins, of which series the asses appear to weigh one or two ounces. In the time of Julius Cæsar the as equalled only half an ounce, and, from this period, copper or rather brass coins of two sizes appear, struck of yellow brass (orichalcum),¹ and called *sestertius*² and dupondius. In the reign of Nero we find coins with the marks II, I, and S, suggesting the names dupondius, as, and semis, — the first mark on second brass coins, the second on coins rather smaller, but not small enough to be called third brass, and the last on some third brass coins. If this be the case, the large brass would be the tripondius or quadrussis. This is M. Cohen’s opinion;³ yet we venture to think that the balance of evidence is in favour of the "large brass" being the sestertius, and the "second brass" coin when of the same metal the dupondius, and when of "copper," the as; otherwise we are left altogether without a representative of the sestertius. Be this as it may, there are two or more denominations of copper coins from the reign of Augustus to that of Gallienus, after whose time they cease. The usual divisions of Roman money, which are purely arbitrary, are into large, middle, and small, or 1st, 2nd, and 3rd brass. The small, or third brass, which seem to have had no connection with the as, cease at M. Aurelius (A.D. 180). In the reign of Philip we find a coin rather larger than the usual third brass, called the Philippus aureus, and in the time of Gallienus although the sestertii and dupondii cease altogether as a regular series, there are small coins of brass, which we may suppose to represent the as. In the reign of Diocletian a new coin of copper appeared, termed the follis. This and a smaller coin (the assarius), both of which gradually decrease in size, continue till the reign of Honorius.

² The name sestertius properly belongs to a silver coin, which was equal to two and a half asses. Care must be taken not to confound sestertius and sestertium; the former is a coin, the latter only the name for a sum of money.

The subject of the copper coinage has puzzled many numismatists, and we may hope that some more certain and scientific classification may, ere long, be discovered. Really sound results could only be obtained by carefully weighing a very great number of coins of each emperor, though these results might lead to no more than an abandonment of all existing theories.

or piece of five unciae (without Rome); the bes or bessis, a piece of eight unciae; and the dodrans, or piece of nine unciae; which last two have been found among the coins of the family Cassia.

§ 3. Silver.

According to Pliny (l. c.), silver was not coined at Rome till B.C. 269, five years before the first Punic war; but there are no pieces assignable to that period, and silver coinage struck in Rome cannot be ascribed to an earlier period than the coinage of gold, B.C. 207. It has generally been supposed that the earliest Roman silver coins were those struck in Campania under Roman authority, having for the obverse the heads of Hercules, Apollo, Quirinus(?), Mars, and head of a beardless youth in a Phrygian cap, supposed by some to be Ascanius; and, for the reverse, Victory, Romulus and Remus suckled by the wolf, a horse galloping, and a horse's head, some bearing the legend ROMANO, and some ROMA, the former being slightly earlier than the latter. The style of the art of these coins indubitably points to the period of Pyrrhus; those having Victory on the reverse should be compared with his gold coins of the same type. The identity of the gold coins of Alexander I. of Epirus, and one of Tarentum, and the similarity of many of those of Pyrrhus to coins of the Bruttii and Syracuse, justify this comparison, which would carry up the commencement of official Roman coinage, not struck in Rome, to nearly B.C. 300. The next in date, which may have been actually struck in Rome, are those with the head of Janus on the obverse, and, on the reverse, a quadriga, with the legend ROMA, incuse and in relief, and those, with head of Jupiter, and on the reverse Victory standing near a trophy. The third in date, which certainly were struck in Rome, are those with the head of Rome helmeted, behind X (denarius), and, on the reverse, the Dioscuri on horseback, or a chariot with two or four horses.¹ Denarius was the name given to the principal silver coin, from its being equivalent at first to ten asses. It had two divisions, the Quinarius, its half, and the Sestertius, its quarter,—the former, when the type of Victory was represented on the obverse, being called "Victorius." According to Pliny, there were originally 84 denarii to the pound, and subsequently 96. In the time of Augustus

there were 84 to the pound: the reduction to 96 is supposed to have been made by Nero. In the reign of Caracalla a silver coin of a larger size appeared, called "Argenteus Antoninianus," having always the radiate head of an emperor, as Apollo,—or that of an empress, as Diana. There were 60 struck to the pound: the coin was always of base silver; and, in the reign of Volusian, the standard became extremely base, and the metal was either copper or tin, both covered with a wash of silver. In the reign of Diocletian good silver reappears, and is found to the end of the empire. The coins were still of two sizes, probably the "argenteus" and the "denarius." The principal silver coin of Constantine the Great was the _centenionalis_, which is most likely the silver coin, which weighs a little less than fifty grains: when it was first issued is not certain. Many consular silver coins bear the marks of their value. The denarius, X, X, or XVI: the quinarius, V or Q: the sestertius, IIS. The marks on the denarius have reference to its original value, ten asses, and, subsequently, sixteen asses. The Q on the quinarius is the initial of its name; the V marks its original value, five asses. The IIIS on the sestertius may stand for "libra, libra, semis," or for "two;" at any rate it is equivalent to two asses and a half, its original value.

2 After the reign of Augustus the denarius equalled twelve asses; and though the soldier nominally received a _denarius_ per diem, he was only paid _ten asses_. This we learn from Pliny,—"in militari stipendio denarius pro decem assibus datus."

The aureus was first coined in Rome, according to Pliny, sixty-two years after the silver, in the year B.C. 207. The earliest are those struck in Campania with the word ROMA on the reverse; they are of three sizes. The first has the mark XX (supposed to be 20 sestertii), the second XXXX (40 sestertii,) and the third Ψ X, (60 sestertii;) besides, there are three other sizes with the youthful heads of Janus on the obverse, the middle size only of which has the mark XXX, which seem to be of a different standard. In the time of Augustus there were 40 struck to the pound, and under Nero the coinage was reduced to 45. Caracalla effected a further reduction by striking 50 to the pound, and under Gallienus the coinage is so irregular that it is impossible to fix any rate. There are apparently double aurei, aurei, half-aurei, and other divisions, all of fluctuating weights. Under Diocletian there was another change to 60 to the pound, and Constantine the Great suppressed the aureus, and issued a new gold coin, the solidus, of which 72 were struck to the pound,—a standard which remained unchanged to the fall of the Eastern Empire, though latterly the metal was greatly alloyed. The divisions of the solidus are incorrectly called semissis and tremissis.

II. Types.

§ 1. Types of Consular Denarii.

The two most common types on the consular denarii are the biga and quadriga; but there are many of great interest, illustrating Roman traditions and Roman history. It may not be out of place to notice a few of the most important types. A denarius of the family Ἀμιλία represents M. Lepidus placing a diadem on the head of Ptolemy V. (Epiphanes), with the legend Tv-Tor. Reg. [is] (the guardian of the king). Another, inscribed L. BvCa, represents the dream of Sulla. A third represents Paulus Ἀμιλία attaching a trophy to a tree, before which stand Perseus, with his hands bound behind his back, and his two children. A fourth has allusion to the famous bridge, Sublicius, built by Ancus Martius, and afterwards called Ἀμιλία. A fifth represents the submission of Aretas, king of Arabia, to Marcus Scaurus. Indeed, there are few families that offer so many interesting illustrations as the Æmilia. The most remarkable coin of the family of Junia is that of Brutus, with the legend EID. MAR. (Eidus Martiae), and the type, a cap of liberty between two daggers.¹ Marcia gives us the head of Ancus Marcius. Sergia represents probably Marcus Sergius, who was wounded twenty-three times in one battle, and lost his right hand in a second, on which he had an iron hand made; on this coin he is represented holding his enemy with the left hand. Tituria commemorates the Rape of the Sabines, and Tarpeia being crushed under shields. Mr. Poole has admirably arranged the principal classes for the types of the consular denarii² in the following manner:—

"1. Head or figure of a divinity worshipped at Rome; as head of Jupiter (Petilia), figures of the Dioscuri (Junia), or of a divinity worshipped by the family or individual striking the coin, as head of Neptune (Pompeia, coin of Sextus Pompeius).

2. Sacred, natural, or artificial object; as pon—tific implements (Antonia). This class is not a very large one, and sacred animals rarely occur.

3. Head or figure of a personification of a country or town; as heads of Hispania (Carisia), Roma (Julia), Alexandria Ægypti (Æmilia).

4. Head or figure of an allegorical personage; as heads of Pavor (Hostilia), Pallor (id.), Honor et Virtus (Fufia, Marcia).

5. Fabulous monster; as Scylla (Pompeia).

6. Head or figure of an ancestral personage; as heads of Numa (Calpurnia), Ancus Marcius (Marcia).

7. Events connected with ancestors; as figure of M. Lepidus as tutor. reg.[is], crowning Ptolemy Epiphanes (Æmilia).

8. Places connected with historical exploits, and of a votive character; as Pharos of Messana (Pompeia, of Sextus, probably commemorating the sea-fight off Messana, b. c. 38).

9. Symbolical representations commemorating contemporary events; as a general welcomed on landing by a country or city (Minatia).

10. Heads of living personages exercising dictatorial power, or in very high authority; as Sulla (Cornelia).

11. Representations connected with military matters; as legionary standards (Antonia)."
§ 2. Types of the Imperial Series.

The Imperial series commences with Augustus, and is a continuation of the family, though the types bear a vast difference. It would be impossible to enumerate the various examples occurring, but a few may be selected for illustration. As regards the obverse, we sometimes find a bust, sometimes a head, sometimes with the cuirass and paludamentum, and sometimes with either or neither. In many instances the coins afford portraits that have escaped the notice of historians.¹ The reverses are either mythological, allegorical, or historical. A few of the latter class may suffice as examples. The coins of Drusus bear types relative to his conquest of the Germans; the De. Britannis of Claudius, the IVDAEA. CAPTA and IVDAEA. DEVICTA of Vespasian and Titus; the coins of Trajan for his architectural as well as historical types; the famous medallion of Commodus with BRITANIA (sic); the coins of Sept. Severus and Caracalla with VICTORIAE. BRITTANICAE, and especially the coins of Hadrian, which, besides bearing mythological and allegorical representations, have the names of the various provinces visited by him.

§ 3. Portraits.

Portraits of no living personage appeared on the early coins of Rome; the heads were generally those of deities. Julius Cæsar was the first who obtained permission to put his portrait on the coins. The heads of Livia, Antonia, and Agrippina, wife of Germanicus, are beautiful portraits. Those of Livia, as Salus, Justitia and Pietas, and the bust of Antonia, as Ceres, are fine examples of good treatment. The heads of Antoninus Pius and M. Aurelius are good work; and that of the younger Faustina is inferior to none in the series. With Commodus the good portraits close.

§ 4. Titles and Surnames.

Julius Cæsar contented himself with the title of Perpetual Dictator. Augustus added Imperator.

2 Mr. Poole, in his article on "Numismatics" in the Encyclopaedia Britannica, has a note in which he suggests that the bust so long known as "Clytie" was intended to represent Antonia. From the great similarity of workmanship, and from the modest style of each, I am quite inclined to be of Mr. Poole's opinion.

3 For the difference between Imperator in its original sense, and Imperator when assumed by the emperors, see page 31.
and Pater Patriae. Trajan was the first emperor who had the title of Optimus Princeps conferred on him by the senate. Antoninus was called Pius, and was also imitated by Severus, Caracalla, Geta, and Elagabalus, who deserved the worst epithet that could have been bestowed on him. Didius Julianus is called Rector Orbis, and Pescennius Niger, Justus. Cæsarius is the first who is styled Nobilis Caesar: Nobilissimus Caesar occurs frequently on the coins of the emperors from Constantine downwards. Tetricus styled himself Invictus; and the epithets Beatissimus, Felicissimus, Senior, and Dominus noster, occur on the coins of Diocletian and Maximian. These are generally supposed to be posterior to their abdication. Hannibalian is called rex. At a later period of the empire, the letters D. N (Dominus noster) take the place of Imperator. Posthumous coins relating to consecration give the emperors and empresses the titles of Divus and Diva, which is last noticed on the coins of Constantine the Great, who was baptized on his death-bed. The emperors also received surnames from the senate. Nero was called Armeniacus: Trajan, Germanicus, Dacicus, Parthicus: Aurelius added Maximus and Medicus: Commodus took the surname of Britannicus, as also did Severus and his sons; and the second Claudius is distinguished by the surname of Gothicus.
The empresses sometimes received titles from the senate, as, Genetrix orbis, Mater Augg., Mater Deum, etc.

III. Offices mentioned in inscriptions.

§ 1. Tribunitia Potestas.

The Tribunitian title is inscribed on nearly all the coins of the early emperors from Augustus downwards, and is generally abbreviated on the coins TR. P., TR. POT., TRIB. POT. Augustus was the first emperor who received the title of the tribunitian power; and this must be carefully distinguished from the title of “Tribunus Plebis.” Under the republic no tribune of the people could absent himself from the city for the whole day; and their power extended, at no time, further than a mile beyond its gates. They were elected, according to Dionysius, always on the tenth of December, and the tribuneship was only of a year’s duration, though we find from Cicero that the election was in July. The tribunitian power conferred on the emperors was perpetual, and decreed at any time in the year. None but plebeians were eligible to the office of tribune, and patricians were compelled to renounce their own order and become plebeians before accepting it. The power of the tribunes was too great not to be desired by the emperors, and Augustus, though a patrician, had the tribunitian power conferred on him without the office; and, in return for this public favour, always dated the years of his reign by the years of his holding this power. All his successors copied his example, and dated their "tribunitia potestas" from the day it was first conferred. Augustus first received the title in 731 (B.C. 23), and renewed it every year, so that we know that the year of his death was in the xxxviith tribunitian power. Eckhel says that "the tribunitian power of the emperors was repeated in such a manner that, from the time of Augustus to the time of Antoninus Pius, it was renewed on the same day as that on which it was received, and from the time of Antoninus to Gallienus every first of January." The coins of Nero, Titus, Domitian,¹ and others, fully establish the first assertion, and, as the tribunitian power never varies within one and the same Julian year, it is clear that it was renewed on the first of ¹ The "trib. pot." (except the 11th and 14th) is on all the coins of Nero, from 807 (A.D. 54) to 821 (A.D. 68). Domitian's first "trib. pot." was in 834 (A.D. 81), and just before he died he had entered his sixteenth (849, A.D. 96). Vespasian and Hadrian, as many other emperors, neglected to put the tribunitian year on their coins.

January. The abbreviations TR. P., TR. POT., or TRIB. POT., as I have before remarked, are on the coins of all the earlier emperors, and the year of the tribunitian power is usually added, which determines the year of the reign, excepting in the cases when the emperor was decorated with the tribunitian power during the reign of his predecessor. Tiberius, the adopted son of Augustus, was decorated with the tribunitian power, for five years, in 748 (B.C. 6), and again in 757 (A.D. 4), for ten years. In 766 (A.D. 13), Tiberius governed the provinces conjointly with Augustus, and was again associated in the trib. pot. On a gold quinarius in the British Museum we find the date TR. P. XVII, which is the second year of his reign, the year of Rome 768 (A.D. 15), though the "tribunitia potestas" is the seventeenth. Tiberius received the trib. pot. thirty-eight times from 748 (B.C. 6) to 790 (A.D. 37), an interval of four years taking place between 753 and 757 (B.C. 1 and A.D. 4). After the time of Gallienus (1021, A.D. 268), the numbers of the tribuneship get confused, and they cease to occur regularly on the coins, and become of no chronological use.
§ 2. The Consulate.

Eckhel, in his "Doctrina Num. Vet." (vol. viii. cap. 1, De Consulibus Cæsaribus), has so ably discussed the subject of the consulship, that it is from him we chiefly take our remarks. The abbreviation usually found on coins is cos. There was a law that an interval of ten years should elapse between two elections of the same person to the office of consul; but, towards the close of the republic, the law was not very strictly observed. Marius was consul for the first time in B. C. 647, and consecutively consul five times—from B. C. 650 to 654—and was not made consul the seventh time till thirteen years after. Others sprung up, and claimed the office. Sulla had it in an interval of not more than eight years, and was also appointed "Dictator." The usurpation of Julius Cæsar followed, and we find him as consul five times and perpetual dictator. This is confirmed by coins. His successors followed no rule, but took upon themselves the consulship whenever they wished. Vespasian, during a reign of ten years, renewed it nine times, and Domitian was consul seventeen times.¹ In the reign of Tiberius the

¹ "The emperors," (says Eckhel,) "took upon themselves the consulship, either that they might leave some appearance consuls were no longer elected by the people, but appointed by the senate; and, at last, consuls were appointed for part of a year only. The different classes under the empire are as follows:

(A.) Consules ordinarii.

These were created on the kalends of January, and were the nearest representatives of the old consuls; they gave their name to the year, and were similar to the "ἀρχων ἐπώνυμος" at Athens.

(B.) Consules suffecti.

The consul suffectus was appointed when one of the consuls died, in his stead for the rest of the year: they were almost unknown out of Rome and Italy, and were on that account called minores. As the consules suffecti occasionally obtained the ordinary consulate, they reckoned the consulatus suffectus with it. Octavius, in 711 (B. C. 43), was suffectus, and when he was made consul again in 721 (B. C. 33), he was styled itervm. consvl. Agrippa was of the old form of the republic, or that they might render the year intended for some remarkable festivities remarkable by their consulship, or from vanity, or from unwillingness to advance the reputation of others; or from any other cause."
consul three times, in 717, 726, 727 (B.C. 37, 28, 29), and consul suffixtus in 735 (B.C. 19). In the time of Constantine consules suffixtiti were abolished, and two consuls were appointed, one at Rome,
and one at Constantinople.

(c.) Consules honorarii.

These had only the name without any authority;
and, though the rank was merely nominal, yet it was sought after by the rich with great eagerness.
These consuls were chosen by the senate, under the will of the emperor.

(d.) Consularis.

This was a title given to some, with permission to have the insignia of a consul without being consul: it was also given to generals, and was an established title of the governors of provinces.

(e.) Consules designati.

Consuls were elected some time before they entered on their office, and on coins we find cos. des., cos. design. M. Antonius was first appointed consul in 710 (B.C. 44), and from that year to 715 (B.C. 39), we only find cos.
on his coins; but from 715 (B.C. 39) to 720

(b. c. 34), cos. des. iter. et. ter. (consul elect for the second and third time), then from 723 (b. c. 31), cos. tert. (consul a third time.) Caius and Lucius were designated consuls, so as to enter on that office five years after. Nero was designated consul in 804 (a. d. 51), but did not enter into office till 808 (a. d. 55), and on his coins we read NERONI. CLAVDII. DVMOC. GERI. COS. DESIGN., or GERMANICO. COS. DESIG.¹

(F.) Consulatus dimidius.

The half-consulship consisted of one consul only, without any colleague. The first example that we find is that of Pompey the Great in 702 (b. c. 52). In the reign of Constantine the Great the same occurs, and in the years 1062, 1063 (a. d. 309, 310), Maxentius was consul alone.

(G.) Post-consulatum.

According to Eckhel the formula “after the consulship” was used “when either on account of the discord of the rulers, or wars, or the murders of princes, or other causes, the year had not its recognized consuls;"—and the year that was vacant received its name from the recognized consul of the preceding year. It occurs for the first time in A.D. 309, Maximianus X. and Galerius VII. having been consuls in the preceding year; and the year 309 is in consequence designated, "In the first year after the consulship of Maximianus X. and Galerius VII." 1 Another example is in the case of Basilius:—the years A.D. 542, 543, 544, etc. are designated, "In the first, second, third, etc. year after the consulship of Basilius."

Consular Insignia.

The insignia of the kings of Rome were said to be the "trabea" (a toga ornamented with purple and white stripes), the "toga praetexta" (a toga with a broad purple border), the crown of gold, the ivory sceptre, the "sella curulis," and twelve lictors with fasces.

All these insignia were given to the consuls except the crown and the sceptre. On the well-known coins of Junia the elder Brutus is represented marching between two lictors, each bearing the fasces and axe, and preceded by an acensus.

The curule chair occurs on the coins of Cornelius Sulla, who was joint consul with Pompeius Rufus, and on several others of the consular series; but it is also assigned to other magistrates inferior to the consuls. The fasces are represented on the coins of C. Norbanus and others, and the lorum, the consular dress of the lower empire.

2 Florus speaks of the insignia of Tarquinius Priscus as follows:—"Inde fasces, trabae, curules, annuli, phalerae, paludamenta, praetexta: inde quod aureo curru quattuor equis triumphatur: et insignia, quibus imperii dignitas eminet." Juvenal makes allusion to the insignia in speaking of Quirinus and Servius Tullius:

"Ancilla natus trabeam, et diadema Quirini, Et fasces meruit Regum ultimus ille bonorum."

3 From other authorities we know that the consul was preceded by twelve lictors, and the dictator by twenty-four.

4 This coin of Brutus (Junia) was restored by Trajan. There is another coin in gold, struck at Cosa in Thrace, probably by the order of Brutus, representing him marching between two lictors; in the field L. B. (Lucius Brutus?)

5 Lorum or lorus (?) means a thong; and Vopiscus, in Au-which was formed of striped embroidery, on the consular “Diptycha” extending from 1189 to 1292 (A.D. 428 to 541).

(1.) The Consular Procession.

On the first of January the senate and people waited on the new consuls (those designated in the preceding year), at their houses, in order that they might make their procession (procedere), and be conducted with great pomp to the Capitol, where they offered up their vows. Eckhel refers to Juvenal, where the consular procession is expressed solely by the word processus:

> "Cum te summmoveant, qui testamenta merentur Noctibus, in cælum quos evehit, optima summi
Nunc via processus, vetulæ vesica beatae."

The word *summmoveant*¹ expresses clearly that the reliano, 46, uses the compounds “monolores” (with one thong), “dilores” (with two), “trilores” (with three), and “pentelores” (with five), as adjectives to vestes, to express robes having one, two, three, and five stripes of purple.

¹ Submoveo when used of “a lictor” means to clear away, to make room. In Liv. iii. 48, we read, I, lictor, submove tur-bam. Horace also alludes to this practice in Od. ii. 16:

> "Non enim gazæ, neque consularis
Summovet lictor miseros tumultus
Mentis, et curas laqueata circum
*Tecta volantes."
lictors walked before the consul in the procession, and cleared the way.

On many of the coins we find an emperor in a quadriga bearing the sceptre with the eagle; and the difficulty is to determine whether this is meant to represent a consular procession or a triumph. Eckhel gives this rule,—“When there is a representation as above on a coin of any year, in which it is certain an emperor made a procession, and especially if history does not mention a triumph, it cannot be doubted that it is a consular procession.” On a large brass coin of Commodus inscribed P. M. TR. P. XI., IMP. VI., COS. V. S. C., there is the above type, and on the chariot is a bas-relief representing Victory crowning a trophy; and Eckhel says that the large brass coin of the same emperor having the same type, with the legend P. M. TR. P. XV. IMP. VIII. COS. VI. S. C., which date clearly marks the year 943 (A. D. 190), alludes to the procession that was made by Commodus as consul for the sixth time. On two gold coins of Caracalla and Geta, respectively reading cos. II. and cos. the emperor is in a chariot holding a sceptre; and on both large and second brass coins of Caracalla with the legend P. M. TRP. XVI. IMP. II. COS. IIII. P. P. S. C., the emperor is in a quadriga holding a sceptre with eagle, and crowned by Victory, who is standing behind him. On coins of Macrinus the same type occurs when he entered on his second consulship, and on coins of Elagabalus we find the same types when he entered on his second, third, and fourth consulships. Eckhel quotes the remarkable aureus of Diocletian and Maximian,¹ and says that it may be subjected to the same rule:—

IMPP. DIOCLETIANO. ET. MAXIMIANO. AVGG. NN.

Laureated busts of the emperors, holding the sceptre with the eagle. Rx.

IMPP. DIOCLETIANO III. ET. MAXIMIANO. COSS.

The emperors in a quadriga of elephants bearing palms: Victory flying above.

A coin of Maxentius reads FELIX. PROCESS. CONSVLAT. AVG. N. The emperor in a quadriga of elephants (or in a car with six horses) holding branch and sceptre. Here the consular procession is clearly recorded. Noris, however, asserts that where the emperor is in a quadriga of elephants a triumph is meant, as the emperors very frequently triumphed in quadrigae drawn by that animal. Horses were also used for triumphs as well as for processions. On a coin of Tiberius struck in 767 (A.D. 14) we have the same type, and in this year he entered on the consulship, but history mentions no triumph. The olive-branch, so often carried by the emperors, is equally appropriate to either the triumph or procession.

(J.) Ornamenta Consularia.

The Consular ornaments or honours were for candidates for whom there was no room on the curule chair; and Julius Cæsar was no doubt the first to grant these favours, being unable to confer the consulship on all. In B.C. 43 Octavius was sent out with Hirtius and Pansa against M. Antonius with the title and insignia of prætor; and obtained the right of voting with the consulars, and of holding the consulship ten years before he attained the legitimate age. On the death of Hirtius and Pansa he compelled the senate to make him consul. In the reign of Claudius we find the dignity conferred even on strangers. On the death of Caligula in 794 (A.D. 41), Agrippa Herodes I, grandson of Herod the Great, was at Rome, and assisted Claudius in gaining possession of the empire. For this, besides receiving Judæa and Samaria as additions to his dominion, he was invested with the consular dignity. In the reign of Severus, Plautianus was presented with the consular ornaments or honours; and when he afterwards received the consulship, was announced as consul for the second time. The emperor Macrinus was opposed to this new regulation.

(K.) The Oriental and Occidental Consul.

Constantinople was dedicated and founded by Constantine the Great in A.D. 330, but, after this, the consulship was not discontinued. According to Eckhel, the first consuls were in A.D. 338, on the death of Constantine the Great, when Ursus was consul in the West, and Polemius in the East. When Theodosius divided the Roman world into two states, the consuls were the only link between the two empires, and one was always nominated at Rome, and the other at Constantinople, the year being still called by their combined names.

(L.) The Consulship extinct.

We have thus traced the consulship, with its various changes, down to a time when this old office became unimportant. The year, however, was named after the consuls as late as A.D. 541 in the reign of Justinian. The emperors still continued to assume the title on accession. It occurs, for the last time, on the coins of Heraclius I. alone, with the legend \textit{επαραιο. εονσυαλ}, and also on the coins of Heraclius I. with his sons Heraclius Con-stantinus and Heracleonas. At length it was abolished by law in the reign of Leo Sapiens (A. D. 886—911).

§ 3. The Proconsulates.

The proconsul was an officer who acted in the place of a consul, without holding the consularship itself, though, generally, the proconsul was one who had been consul. The first proconsul mentioned by Livy (III. 4) was Titus Quintius, who was sent out as proconsul in 290 (B. C. 462) to the relief of the camp, when the Romans were fighting against the Æquans. Anciently, the

1 Heraclius I. made himself consul in A. D. 610, and his two sons, Heraclius Constantinus and Heracleonas, consuls respectively in 631 and 640. The coins of Heraclius I. and Heraclius Constantinus have the legend D. N. ERACLIO. CON-svliba, and those of Heraclius I. and Heracleonas read d. m. n. heracai consvlib. R. victoria. consabia. The first legend as interpreted by M. Barthélemy reads, Domino nostro Eraclio Consuli, the second, Dominis nostris Eracli(is) Consuliib(us), and the reverse, Victoria Consulis or Consu-lum. The letters BA and ABIA are unexplained. May not BA represent "21," as the period from 610, when Heraclius I. made himself consul, to the time when he appointed his son Constantinus to the same office in 631, is exactly twenty-one years (?) See the articles "Sur les Monnaies Consulaires du Bas-Empire," by M. Anatole de Barthélemy, in the Revue Numismatique, 1857, p. 247: 1860, p. 129.
proconsuls had the command of consul prolonged (prorogatum) after their time of office had expired. The first time this occurs is at the commencement of the second Samnite war, when a prolongation of command was granted to Q. Publilius Philo¹ (Liv. viii. 23. 26). In the later times of the republic the consuls, after the expiration of their office, received the government of a province with the title of proconsules. Their authority only lasted a year, and they left the province immediately on a successor being sent. In the time of Augustus the proconsulate was made perpetual, and was decreed from that time to all the emperors, and very often by them to the Caesars their successors.² On an aureus of Pompey, in the Musée de Bologne, we read PROCOS, and on the silver coins, coupled with Varro proquästor (family Terentia), and Cnæus Piso proquästor (family Calpurnia), we find MAGN. PROCOS. This was the ordinary proconsulate, where the proconsul was sent out under the usual regulations. The title PROCOS. (or PROCOSUL) occurs on the coins of Diocletianus, Max-

² The proconsuls under the emperors had only a civil power and no military command (imperium).
imianus Herculeus, Constantius Chlorus, Licinius senior, and Constantine the Great: and Eckhel says that the numbers iterum III. IV. etc. sometimes are added after this title, but cannot suggest any reason for a renewal of a perpetual office.

It was rarely that the proconsuls ever received a triumph; and the last instance of saluting a proconsul with the title of imperator was in the case of Junius Blæsus, who received it from Tiberius: —"Id quoque Blæso tribuit, ut imperator a legionibus salutaretur." (Tac. Ann. III. 74.)

The title proconsul is not derived from imperator. In the time of the republic many received the name of imperator who had gained victories or had succeeded in any expedition carried on under their own auspices. But it was usurped by Julius Cæsar in 693 (B. C. 61), and used as a prænomen, whereas, if applied to a general, it is used after the name, as, "IMP. erator CAESAR. DIVI. F.," "M. Tullius Cicero imperator." After Julius Cæsar had usurped it, nearly all the emperors followed his example, and the proconsul administered his province always under the commands of the emperor,

3 Tiberius and Claudius did not adopt the prænomen of imperator; and when the latter word occurs with numbers after it, which it does very frequently on coins, it alludes to some victory gained, and the title imperator is assumed in its original sense.
so as to establish the superiority of the imperial proconsular authority.

The census, or a numerical list of Roman citizens and an account of their property, was first instituted, by Servius Tullius, in B.C. 576 (Liv. i. 42). In B.C. 440 the censorship was conferred on Papirius and Sempronius, persons whose consulate has been doubted, in order to recompense them for having enjoyed the consulship for only a part of the usual period (Liv. iv. 8). The censorship was confined to consuls and patricians till B.C. 348, when Caius Marcius Rutilus, who had been the first plebeian dictator, became the first plebeian censor with Cnæus Manlius (Liv. vii. 22). In B.C. 336, Publilius Philo passed three laws, very advantageous to the commons, but injurious to the nobility; one of which was, that one of the censors should necessarily be elected out of the commons, as it had been already established that both the consuls might be plebeians (Liv. viii. 12), but it was not till B.C. 131 that both censors were plebeians. It is not my object here to enter into an account of when they were elected or their duties of office, as these matters are not of importance to our present subject:
OFFICES MENTIONED IN INSCRIPTIONS. 33

suffice it to say that the censorship was considered the highest dignity in the state, excepting the dictatorship, and especially as it involved the general control of the morals of the citizens. The censorship continued in existence, though by no means regularly, down to B.C. 22, when Augustus appointed Munatius Plancus and Paullus Æmilius Lepidus as censors. The forms we find on coins are, censor, cens, or cen. According to Dion. (XLIII. 14) Julius Cæsar was appointed by the senate to inspect the morals of the people for three years, under the title of præfectus morum, and was afterwards censor for life (Dion. XLIV. 5). Augustus received the censorship for life as præfectus morum; ("recepit et morum legumque regimen perpetuum." Suet. Aug. 27.) Horace makes allusion to this in his epistle to Augustus (lib. II. 1):

"Cum tot sustineas et tanta negotia solus,
Res Italas armis tuteris, moribus ornes, Legibus emendes."

and in future the emperors discharged the duties of censor under the above title. Tiberius, however, thought the censorship unfit for his time. ("Non id tempus censurae." Tac. Ann. II. 33.) From history we know that L. Vitellius was appointed censor by Claudius, as colleague, when the latter really took the census of the people, and this is confirmed by the coins of L. Vitellius, which read L. VITELLIUS. III. COS. CENS., COS. III. CENSOR.¹ Vespasian was named censor with his son Titus as colleague. This is also confirmed by coins. The title of censor occurs on the coins of Domitian with his eleventh consulship, and perpetual censor, with the same consulship and on all the following years. This is not imitated by his successors. Trajan Decius attempted to restore the censorship by nominating Valerian I. without a colleague, but the death of Decius prevented this being carried into effect, and saved Valerian an arduous duty.

§ 5. Princeps Juventutis.

This title occurs on the coins of the Cæsars from Augustus to a late period of the empire. Caius and Lucius, grandsons of Augustus, were the first who had the title bestowed on them. On the reverse of a gold coin of Augustus, struck after their death, we find C. L. CAESARES. AUGVSTI. F. COS.

¹ On a large brass coin of Aulus Vitellius there is the following legend on the reverse: L. VITELL. CENSOR II. S. C. Eckhel terminates a long discussion by saying that perhaps Vitellius, to give more honour to the name of his father, gives him the title of censor for the second time. History makes no mention of it.
DESIGN. PRINC. IVVENT. After this it was the custom to confer this title on the probable successors to the throne, when they first entered into public life, and were presented with an equus publicus.

IV. ON RESTORED COINS.

Many emperors restored the coins of those who had preceded them, and the form found on coins is generally REST.; and sometimes at full length, RESTITVIT. Among the family coins we find "nummi restitutionum" of Titus, Domitian, Trajan, Marcus Aurelius, and Verus (together); Titus, Domitian, and Marcus Aurelius and Verus, each only restored one family; but of the known existing coins restored by Trajan, there are thirty-one families, besides some uncertain. The same emperor restored more of the imperial series than any other emperor. It would be useless to enumerate them all; and I would refer the reader to M. Cohen's admirable works, "Les Médailles Impériales," and "Les Médailles Consulaires," and also to an article in the "Numismatic Journal," vol. i. p. 243, where there is a short essay on the coins denominated "Restored."
V. ON COINS INSCRIBED "VOTIS."

WHEN Augustus refused the supreme power, offered to him for life, he consented to accept it for ten years only, and when these had expired, he again accepted it for another period of ten years, and so on to the end of his life. From this a festival called the Decennalia was established, which was celebrated by the emperors every ten years. Accounts of this festival and "the Vows" are to be found in Dion Cassius\(^1\) and Suetonius.\(^2\) On coins of Augustus we find the legend, VOT. P. SVSC: PRO. SAL. ET. RED. I. O. M. SACR, as also CL. V. (clypeus votivus) OB. CIVIS. SERVATOS. But chronologically these "nummi votorum" are not of the slightest use. For example, on the coins of Commodus we find the vota suscepta and soluta, with the ixth, xth, xith, xiith, and xvth tribunitian years. Many emperors anticipated the decennalia in the same manner. On the coins of the lower empire we find VOT. XX. MVLT. XXX. &c., and the repetition of the vows, signify "that these were the vicennalian vows of the emperor, and he hoped that he might live to the tricennalian." The "nummi votorum" have been largely discussed by the learned Eckhel; and, as a translation of his long article would take too much space, I refer the reader to his work for more information. (viii. p. 473.)

VI. ON THE INSCRIPTION "S. C."

FROM the fact that these letters occur nearly always on all brass coins, it is evident that the coinage of brass was under the control of the senate, while that of the silver and gold not having the s. c. was at the disposal of the emperor. These letters generally appear in the field of the coin, but are sometimes found in the exergue.

There are only two coins of this family, one with the head of Pallas, no legend, and on rev. ROMA, the Dioscuri on horseback, and beneath the head of the vestal Cloelia (?) ; the other with the head of Pallas, and the name "coclēs," and rev. the same as the last, excepting the head. The specimen in the British Museum of this last coin is the best known, but not above suspicion. The restorations of Trajan include both these coins.

§ 3. Family Series.

List II.

The following list comprises only gold and silver coins. The object is to show the way in which the families were connected; from which it will appear that many of the families that have hitherto been classed by themselves, should not be thus treated as independent. For instance, the families of Vipsania and Voconia are to be found under Julia. On their coins we find the head of Octavian, and they are the moneyers. Those that are coupled, as ÆMILIA | ANTONIA | &c., are families where the individuals are triumvirs or colleagues at the same time; in some cases the family first mentioned is commemorated. Where the form ÆMILIA-LIVINEIA, ANNIA-TARQVITIA, &c. is used, the individuals of the last-named family are of less rank than the first. Those that have * after their name are commemorated.

1 Aulus Postumius Albinus adopted Decimus Brutus, son of Decimus Brutus, who was consul in 677 (b. c. 77), and who was the murderer of Julius Caesar. It is worthy of notice that Brutus, instead of calling himself Brutus, son of Albinus, is styled on the coins Albinus, son of Brutus.

¹ Brutus was adopted into the family Servilia, and took the surname of Cæpio, which properly belongs to Servilia; and as there are no coins with the name Decimus Junius, the coins all being struck after his adoption by the families Postumia and Servilia, it is more correct to put his money to those two families.

§ 4. Prefatory Remarks to the Imperial Series.

The Imperial series properly commences with Augustus, and of that emperor there are coins (both aurei and denarii) of only three types that can be classed to it. Most of his coins must be decidedly assigned to the "Family Series," and for the following reason—"that moneyers struck coins up to the time when he was made Pater Patriae in 752 (B. C. 2), and from that time moneyers ceased striking." The following coins belong to the Family series:

1. Those of "Cæsar Divi Filius," with moneyers.
2. Those of "Cæsar Divi Filius" alone—moneyers striking their own coins at the same time.
3. Those of "Augustus" with moneyers.
4. Those of "Augustus" alone—moneyers striking their own coins at the same time.

The types of these four classes are unmistakeably those of the Family coins. When Augustus was named Pater Patriæ the moneyers ceased coining, and his own coins, issued thenceforward, bear a great resemblance, both in style and type, to those of Tiberius. The obverse legend is CAESAR . AV-GUSTVS. DIVI. F. PATER. PATRIAЕ, the three reverse legends are—

1. TII. CAESAR. AVG. F. TR. POT. XV.¹ N. AR.
2. C. L. CAESARES. AVGOSTI. F. COS. DESIG. PRINC. IIVVENT.² N. AR.
3. PONTIF. MAXIM. N. AR.

This division, looked at historically, may not be the most adviseable, but, numismatically, it offers great advantages. If the two different styles are kept together, as has been the custom heretofore, ¹ This is the xvth tribunitian power of Tiberius (776, A.D. 13). The reign of Tiberius commences with the sixteenth.

² In Cohen, vol. i. p. 52, there is the following coin quoted from Pellerin:—

CAESAR. DIVI. F. PAT. PA.
R. CL. CAESARES. PRINC. IIVVENT.—AR.

At the first reading the two words PAT. PA. seem rather doubtful; but there is a stronger reason why this coin cannot be above suspicion, and that is, the absence of the word Augustus which always accompanies the legend, after Augustus was made "Pater Patriae." M. Cohen, when last in England, pointed out to me that the aureus (No. 241, p. 67, in his first volume) was false. The legends are as follow:—

CAESAR. DIVI. F. PAT. PA.
R. VOTA. PUBLICA.

This coin is open to the same objection as the former in that the word Augustus is omitted.
the similarity of style between the coins of Augustus and Tiberius is not so easily seen. In museums, where there are cabinets of both Family and Imperial coins, a cross reference from the Imperial series to the Family Julia, and from that to the Imperial series, is all that is required.

There are two exceptions (if I may use the word) to the rule; there are gold quinarii with the obverse legend AVGSTVS. DIVI. F., and the reverses bearing the dates TR. POT. XXVII., TR. POT. XXX. (759 and 760, A.D. 6 and 7). These, first, from their dates, secondly, from their fabric, belong to the Imperial series. The omission of Pater Patriae can be accounted for, from the smallness of the coins.

The large and second brass coins struck at Emesa in Syria (also rare), so long attributed to Sulpicius Antoninus, tyrant in the East under Gallienus, must be transferred to Uranius Sulpicius Antoninus, tyrant in the East under Sev. Alexander. His coins are of the greatest rarity; there are only two in gold known: one, lately in the possession of Mr. J. F. W. de Salis, who has presented it to the British Museum; and the other, still in the hands of Mr. Edward Wigan. There is also a second brass coin, in the British Museum, struck at Antioch, which is probably unique (?). (See Plate I. No. 4.)

The coinage in the reign of Gallienus is excessively confused: there seem to be double aurei, aurei, half-aurei, and quinarii, all of different weights, and without the slightest connection one with the other. The name Third Brass, too, must be here abandoned; the coinage seems to be of a mixed metal, mainly copper or tin, both washed with silver; some coins are made to imitate very closely both the denarius and the quinarius. The French numismatists have called this species of coinage Billet; but, as small coins of copper and base metal went on together in the reigns of subsequent emperors, I have adopted in their case the form, "Bil. and (or) small copper."

¹ In M. Cohen's work (tom. iv. p. 492) there are several observations on the coins which he has classed to Valerianus junior. Eckhel was the first to overthrow the opinion of all the numismatists who had classed coins to him, and M. Cohen attempts to prove that this time Eckhel was mistaken. He attributes all the coins bearing the legend, VALERIANVS . P . F . AVG. to Valerian the younger. He then quotes the opinion of Mr. de Salis, who does not agree with this attribution for the following reason: "that Valerian jun. not having been associated to the empire till after the fall of his father, the coins bearing his name (if there are any) would necessarily be made of the base metal of the period of Gallienus." To M. Cohen's observations I would refer those who wish to study the question: I adopt the Museum arrangement.

But these two names may be safely identified with that of "Lælianus," who was also one of the so-called thirty tyrants, and of whom there are many coins extant. The second name is evidently from a barbarous imitation of the coinage of Lælianus. The coin that has been attributed to "Ælianus," tyrant in the reign of Diocletian, is also of the same origin.

There can be no doubt that this is the proper attribution. We know that Alex. Æmilian reigned two or three years, and this coin bearing the date of the second year, from its fabric, must belong to Domitian II. of whom we have no coin struck at Alexandria in his historical name. Æ (barbarous), R 6.

From the above coins (see Plate II. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7) we are able to trace a more satisfactory account of the hitherto obscure family of Odenathus. Athenodorus I. (commonly called Odenathus) was the father of Athenodorus II. and Vabalathus (wrongly called Vabalathus Athenodorus). Zenobia was the wife of Athenodorus I. and the mother of Vabalathus. Who was the mother of Athenodorus II. is not known. Vopiscus, who gives to Vabalathus the name of Balbatus, says, that he was declared emperor by his mother, who acted as regent for him after his father's death, in opposition to the statement of Trebellius Pollio, who declares that Herennianus and Timolaus were decorated with the purple after the death of Athenodorus I. their father. The balance of evidence seems, however, in favour of the statement of Vopiscus. There are no coins of Herennianus and Timolaus, and there are some existing of Vabalathus, struck at Antioch and Alexandria. We find in the Roman series coins with the legends, IM . C . VHABALATHYS . AVG. and VHABALATHYS . VCRIMDE. (with reverse of Aurelian); and in the Greek (with reverse of Aurelian)—

AYT . CPwIAC . OYABALLAAEOC . AΩHNO . Y
AYT . CPwIAC . OYABALLAAEOC . AΩHN . Y.

and Vabalathus alone—

AYT . K . OYABALLAAEOC . AΩHN . Y . CEB.

The letters, AΘHNO . Y, AΘHN . Y. are supposed (and rightly) to stand for 'Αθηνο[δωροῦ] Ἠ[ικός]. The words, CPwIAC, and vCRIMDE, have remained yet unexplained, though several ingenious suggestions have been made concerning them. That they may have the same meaning is probable, but what that meaning is has yet to be discovered. That Vabalathus was the son of Athenodorus and Zenobia,¹

¹ In Boeckh's inscriptions, after the quotation of the inscription found by Sir Gardner Wilkinson, there is the following explanation:—“Nunc docemur Zenobie filium fuisse Vaballathum, qui defuncto Odenatho imperium suscepit, retentis vitrici titulis imperatorii, et Vaballathum istum Græco nomine Athenodorum cognominatum est.” And the annexed stemma is given:—

Odenathus Imp.

| | | |

| Herodes, Vaballathus cog. Athenodorus, Herennianus, Timolaus.

Of course, Vaballathus being the son of a man whose name
we know from an inscription found near Gebayl in Syria by Sir Gardner Wilkinson, and published in the ninth volume of the "Numismatic Chronicle."

I copy it as it is in the "Chronicle:"—

\[ \omega \Pi \ldots \]
\[ \Delta \nu \gamma \gamma \iota \pi \alpha \tau \ldots \iota \Delta \]
\[ \alpha \nu \varepsilon \iota \kappa \nu \tau \omega \varsigma \varepsilon \beta \alpha \varsigma \tau \omega . \]
\[ \kappa \alpha \iota \ldots \alpha \zeta \zeta \nu \omicron \omicron \beta \omicron \iota \iota \omicron \omicron \iota . \]
\[ \varsigma \varepsilon \beta \alpha \varsigma \tau \theta \mu \nu \pi \iota \pi \iota \tau \gamma \ldots \]
\[ \tau \omicron \omega \alpha \iota \iota \theta \tau \omicron \gamma \iota \cdot \ldots \]
\[ \kappa \rho \alpha \tau \omicron \omega \rho \omicron \omicron \omicron \omicron \alpha \ldots \]
\[ \alpha \theta \eta \nu \omicron \omicron \omicron \omicron \omicron \omega \rho \omicron \omicron \omicron . \]

Sir Gardner Wilkinson says that this last word proves that Vabalathus was not the son of Odenathus and Zenobia, but of her first husband. But with this I cannot agree. I think it proves that Vabalathus was the son of Athenodorus and Zenobia. And that Athenodorus I. and Odenathus are one and the same person there can be no doubt. The word Odenathus does not occur on coins, unless we can make it out to be thus spelt on the barbarous gold coin attributed to him. Aspirate the "d," and substitute the letter "d" for "th," and we obtain "Othenadus," a close proximity to Athenodorus.

There is another son of Odenathus by some other woman, mentioned by Dion Cassius:—'Οδέναθος δύο—"Οτι τὸν Ὄδεναθον τὸν παλαιὸν Ρουφίνος ἀναιρεῖ· κατηγόρει δὲ ὁ νέος Ὄδεναθος Ρουφίνου ὡς φονεύσαντα τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῦ.2

was Athenodorus, may have received that name as a cognomen, but \( \alpha \theta \nu \omicron \omicron \omicron \omicron \omicron \alpha \omega \rho \omicron \omicron \omicron \omicron \) can mean nothing else than son of Athenodorus.

2 Post Dionem excerpta Vaticana à Maio edita, p. 141, No. 122. Card. Mai, in his note to this passage, gives the
This may have reference to the son by name Athenodorus, who is represented on a barbarous brass coin accompanied by the head of Aurelian. It bears for legend, ΑΥΡΦΑΙΑΝΟΣ ΑΘΗΝΟΔΩΡΟΣ. Two laureate heads, one bearded, the other that of a youth. It is very clear that the Athenodorus mentioned here cannot be Athenodorus, father of Vabalathus, or we should find an older head. It may be Vabalathus himself. That would destroy our argument, but I cannot see how ΟΥΑΒΑΛΛΑΘΡΟΣ ΑΘΗΝΟΔΩΡΟΥ can be translated in any other way than “Vabalathus, son of Athenodorus.” If that be the case, cannot this coin refer to this fifth son, mentioned above by Dion Cassius?

In conclusion, I may remark that the attributions are those of M. Langlois, and that my attention was first called to them by the paper of the Hon. Leicester Warren (read before the Numismatic Society, April 26, 1860), “On the Decay and Final Extinction of the old Municipal Institutions under Gallienus,” in which he alludes to these new discoveries.

following explanation:—“Hinc cognoscimus seniorem Odennathum patrem illius junioris celeberrimi, qui Zenobian uxorrem habuit, sumpsitque purpuram decreto Gallieni, et Romanum imperium in Oriente contra Persas defensavit.” On what authority he says this, I know not.

The usurper in Egypt Achilleus, and Domitius Domitianus III. are doubtless the same person. There are no known coins with the name of Achilleus existing, and no mention is made in history of Domitius Domitianus. It is well known that Achilleus reigned two years, and as we find Egyptian coins of Domitius Domitianus, there can be no doubt that Achilleus struck his coins under the name of Domitius Domitianus. This attribution is M. Lenormant's, "Iconographie des Empereurs Romains," p. 114. [See Domitianus II. usurper in Egypt under Gallienus, 1015 or 1016 (A. D. 262 or 263).] (See Plate IV. 1, 2.)

¹ On some of the coins of Romulus there is the legend NVBISCONS, of which Mionnet says, "qu'on ignore absolument le sens de ces mots." M. Adrien de Longpérier, in an article of the "Revue Numismatique" (tom. v. 1860, p. 36), has at last given a satisfactory explanation. Many suggestions have been made, as, Nostre Urbis Bis Consul, Nostre Urbis Bis Conservator, &c; but M. Longpérier,

\text{DIVO ROMVLO N.obilissimo v.iro bis. consuli} \\
\text{IMP. MAXENTIVS DIVO ROMVLO N.obilissimo v.iro filio.} \end{align*}

On an inscription in Pighius ("Auct. Inscript." p. 54) we find that Romulus has the title of Clarissimus puer, and at this time Maxentius was living in private life; but when he became Emperor, his son Romulus naturally takes the title of Nobilissimus. Being named Consul twice, and having received the toga virilis, he would no longer be nobilissimus puer, but nobilissimus vir.

² There is the following curious passage relative to Licinius in Dion Cassius ("Excerpt." p. 149, No. 129):—"Ωνι Δικίννοις τὰ χρυσά νομίσματα, ἐν οἷς ὁ Κωνσταντῖνος τὴν κατὰ Σαρματῶν αὐτοῦ νίκην ἔτυπωσεν, οὐ προσεδέχετο ἀλλ’ ἀναχωνυέων αὐτὰ εἰς ἐτέρας μετέφερε χρήσεις.

The Sarmatian victory here alluded to, no doubt refers to the Gothic war in 1075 (A.D. 322), when the Sarmatians followed the Gothic standard either as subjects, or as allies. It is supposed (Gibbon, vol. ii. p. 103, note) that the Sarmatian games, celebrated in the month of November, derived their origin from the success of this war. There is no aureus of Constantine having reference to it, and there is a denarius with the legend, SARMATIA. DEVICTA, mentioned by Eckhel; this legend also occurs on the small copper. The next year, 1076 (A.D. 323), Licinius and Constantine were at war for the second time, and after two battles, the former was taken prisoner and killed by his conqueror. Whether Constantine did strike aurei with the above legend, and whether Licinius did melt them, as relates Dion, are questions we cannot answer.

I have brought this list to a conclusion with the reign of Theodosius I. "The genius of Rome expired with him, the last of the successors of Augustus and Constantine, who appeared in the field at the head of their armies, and whose authority was universally acknowledged throughout the whole extent of the empire."¹  The division of the empire between his two sons, Arcadius and Honorius, the East being allotted to the former, and the West to the latter, coupled with the revolts of the Goths and the Visigoths, causes a confusion in the coinage that is difficult at present to explain.  The empire of the West is generally ended with Romulus Augustus, and the East commenced again with Anastasius.  But this break is one of the worst that could have been chosen.

Justinian, who becomes sole emperor in 1280 (A. D. 527), offers the next most tempting break, but the coinage between the time of Theodosius I. and Justinian, has deterred me from accepting it. Mr. de Salis, who has for some time given his attention to the coins of the lower and Byzantine empire, will, we hope, ere long, publish a work treating upon the coins from Gallienus downwards, and having well studied the Gothic and Visigothic question, will be the fittest person to elucidate many of the hitherto-concealed important facts connected with this branch of Numismatics. It is to him, indeed, that numismatists should be largely indebted, for the many very curious and important changes and attributions that he has discovered, and to him, that the public should be grateful for the magnificent collection of Roman coins that he has presented to the British Museum. Nothing has been published on the coins of the Eastern empire later than the admirable work of M. de Saulcy in 1836, and it is therefore to be hoped that one so competent as Mr. de Salis will undertake to publish the results of recent inquiries, among which his own are especially valuable.

There is one attribution which has been often hinted at, and of which there can be no doubt, that I must notice here, namely, the attribution to Galla Placidia, wife of Constantius (Patricius), of the coins that have hitherto been ascribed to Ælia Placidia, wife of Olybrius. The legend on the coins of Galla Placidia is usually the following:—D. N. GALLA. PLACIDIA. P. F. AVG. And these coins, from their fabric, show two different epochs of her life: that, when her husband Constantius (Patricius) was alive; and that, when, as regent for her son, Placidius Valentinianus III., she was restored to her power after the revolt of Johannes I, who had established himself at Ravenna during the time that we know Placidia must have been at Constantinople. ÆLIA is evidently the common name of the empresses in the East at that time, for example, Ælia Pulcheria, Ælia Eudoxia, &c., and it is not astonishing to find that the coin of Placidia, struck whilst she was at Constantinople by her nephew Theodosius II, should also bear the name Ælia. Dr. Friedländer, in the "Revue Numismatique Belge" (3 série, tome iv. p. 237), says, that the reverses of all the coins of Placidia have reference to the coins of her son, Placidius Valentinianus III. In this he is mistaken—they refer to the coins of Theodosius II. her nephew, struck in the same year, with the legend VOT. XX. MVLT. XXX. On some of the coins, also, of Eudoxia and Pulcheria, we find the same legend; and from the similarity of fabric, the similarity of type, and from the facts above-mentioned, there is no doubt that Galla and Ælia Placidia are one and the same person.

[The explanation of some of the exergual letters in the following list is purely hypothetical, though decidedly probable, and notwithstanding that a great advancement in the knowledge of Mint-marks has lately been made, there are still some connecting links which must be found, before we can speak with absolute certainty.]

AL. | Alexandria.
ALE. | Ambianum (Amiens).
AMB. | Antiochia ad Orontem.
AN. | Aquileia.
ANT. | Arelatum (Arles).
AQ. | Arelatum (Arles).
A. | Arelatum (Arles).
AR. | Arelatum (Arles).
ARL. | Arelatum (Arles).

¹ The exergue of a coin is that part which is divided from the field by a line upon which the figure of the reverse stands.
AVGOB. Augusta (Trevirorum), 72.
C. Camulodunum (Colchester?).
COM. Constantinae Moneta (Arles).
COMOB. Constantinae Moneta, 72. (Arles).
CONOB. Constantinopolis, 72.

1 This mint-mark is found in the exergue on the coins of Gratianus, Valentinian II, Eugenius, and Theodosius I. and was used in Gaul and the greater part of the West. When alone it signifies "Arles." It is sometimes accompanied by TR., LD., MD., AQ., in the field, and the mint-mark may then be interpreted, "struck at Treves, Lyons, &c., on the same standard as that of Arles." After the reign of Theodosius I., when comob becomes the general mint-mark in AR. (Arles), which had been the only mint omitted when com. was in existence, appears in the field.

2 This mint-mark appears in the exergue for the first time under Valentinian II. and Theodosius I. At this time Valentinian II. was the mint-mark in Gaul, and the greater part of the West. Both these Emperors reigned as co-Augusti in Rome, and there (?) struck coins with types imitated from the coins of Constantinople, having in the exergue comob., which was intended to resemble, with a slight distinction, the coin of Constantinople, the money of which was in high repute. When comob. became common to every western mint, BM. (Roma), as well as the other mints, appears in the field. Theodosius I. also struck coins at Sirmium with comob. in the exergue, and BM. in the field.

3 CONOB. is found only on the coins of Constantinople for the first time under Gratianus, Valentinian II. and Theodosius I. and the ob. is an indication of value, and signifies that 72 "solidi" were coined from one pound of gold. OB. is affixed to other mints besides Constantinople for the first time in the reign of Valentinian I. as MD. OB. (Mediolanum, 72), AQ. OB. (Aquileia, 72), &c. and is continued till the MINT-MARKS.

C.\nCON. } Constantinopolis.
CONS.
CON. } \nCONST. 5 Constantina (Arles).
H.
HT. } Heracleia (Perinthus Thraciae, Eski
HERAC. \nHERACL.

Time of Zeno and Anastasius, after which COMOB. and CONOB. become the general mint-marks of the West and East, and the latter is used indiscriminately after the reign of Jus-tinian I.

4 C. is found on the silver coins of Constantinus II, Constantius II, Constantius III. (Gallus), Gratianus, Valentinianus I, and Valens. These, from their fabric, cannot be given to any other place but Constantinople.

5 "Constantina" was the name given to "Arelatum" (Arles) by Constantine, when he improved the town, and built a new one on the opposite side of the Rhone. Aufiniius ("Urbes Claræ," viii.) calls Arelate duplex, and says that there was a bridge of boats on the river. CON. or CONS. (Constantinople) is always accompanied by a Greek letter, while CON. or CONST. is preceded by a Latin. The attribution to Arles of the coins formerly given to Constantinople, is due to the late Mr. Borrell of Smyrna. It was suggested to him by a coin of Fausta with the mint-mark CONST., which could not be of Constantinople, because Fausta died before Byzantium was dedicated. There is no specimen of this coin in the British Museum. The exergual letters are printed CONS. in the Borrell Catalogue. This I believe to be a mistake, and the coin must have been in bad preservation, so as to conceal the T. (See "Borrell Catalogue," p. 81, No. 834.) On some of the small silver and copper coins of this mint of Valentinianus I, Gratianus, and Valens, we find in the field, off. i. ii. iii. (Officina, I. II. III.)

1 Ka, which is found on the silver coins of Valentinianus I. and Gratianus, cannot well be the mint-mark of Carthage, but is probably that of Constantina (Arles). It is the only instance where the final letter is used in a mint-mark (if one may except s. m. Sirmium), the object being in this case to show its difference from Constantinople and Cyzicus. K. is never used as the initial of Constantinople, and not invariably of Cyzicus. The exergual legend on these coins is s. m. kav, which last letter cannot be a Greek P, being too low in the alphabet to be used as a differential letter. This attribution seems the more correct for the three following reasons:—1. If we give these coins to Carthage, we must suppose that that mint was restored for a very short time only under Valentinianus I. and Gratianus, as no other coins attributable to it are found from the time of Maxentius and Alexander Tyrannus down to the Vandal period. 2. We must suppose that silver only was struck there. 3. We must take no notice whatever of the fabric, which is certainly Gallic.

² Or. i. ii. iii. (Officina, I. II. III.) occurs in the field with this mint-mark, on the small silver and copper coins of the emperors mentioned under Const. (q. v.)

³ RA. occurs on barbarous coins. The Ravenna mint is not established till under Honorius, who makes it his capital.
T. Tarraco (Tarragona).

U.C. Thessalonica (Saloniki).

TS. Treviri (Treves).

In all probability the letter P signifies Pecunia or Percussa, P.s. Pecunia Signata, and s. m. Signata Moneta. The mint-mark is generally preceded or followed by a Latin or Greek letter, signifying the number of the issue. The number XX is introduced on the small copper coins for the first time under Aurelian, and during the reign of Probus we find the numbers XX and XXI, but the former was discontinued after his reign, and XXI occurs to the time of Constantine. The numbers XX and XXI, signify that there were twenty or twenty-one small copper to a denarius; consequently in the former case it is the 500th part of an aureus, in the latter the 525th part.

1 This new mint is the suggestion of Mr. de Salis, who has removed from Treves to Tarraco those coins whose fabric approaches most that of the mints of Italy. The first pieces that were certainly struck at Tarraco are those of Aurelian, bearing the marks P, S, T, Q, V, or VI, XXX. This series ceases towards the time that that of Arles commences, and it is probable that Constantine transferred the monetary establishment of Tarragona to his new capital.

2 The letter T, on the coins that may be attributed to Thessalonica, can only be distinguished from those of Tarraco by their style and type, which resemble those of the mints of Constantinople and other Eastern towns.
DESCRIPTION OF THE PLATES.

With the admirable plates before us that illustrate the recent works of M. Cohen, "Les Médailles Consulaires," and "Les Médailles Impériales," it is almost impossible to find any coins to engrave in the Consular Series, and in that of what may be termed the Upper Empire. The accompanying plates offer a variety of coins mainly of the Lower Empire, selected chiefly for their rarity, and for the better explanation of some of the numerous new attributions here published. In the Lower Empire there are many more coins that could be engraved—especially for their exergual letters; too many for the limited space that this small work allows. The difficulty of selection was great; and I trust that the few examples here given may show to the beginner or the amateur that coins are not valuable only on account of their beauty or preservation, and may afford to the practised numismatist some slight pleasure, and some encouragement for the future development of existing theories.
PLATE I.

1. MAG . PIVS . IMP . ITER. Head of Pompey the Great, r., bare; behind, the litus; before, the praefericulum.

R. PRAEF. CLAS. ET. ORAE. MARIT. EX. S. C. Round the coin, IMP. CAES. TRAIAN. AVG. GER. DAC. P. P. REST. Anapias and Amphimonus carrying their parents on their shoulders to escape from the burning of Catana; between them, Neptune standing, l., the r. foot placed on a prow of a vessel, and holding the acrostolium. Ä. B. M.

2. KATAN[AIΩN]. Two naked figures bearing two draped figures on their shoulders, one stepping, r., the other, l. ÄE.

The legend of the "Pii Fratres" was a favourite one with the Cataneans, and is also a subject often mentioned by the Latin poets. The younger Lucilius and Claudian have dwelt on it at considerable length. Catana suffered severely from the ravages committed there by Sextus Pompeius, and was in consequence one of the cities to which a colony was sent by Augustus. (Strabo, vi. cap. 2.) This accounts for the type of the "Pii Fratres" on the coins of Sextus Pompeius. The above coin, restored by Trajan, is of the greatest rarity, one other only being known, which is in the Cab. Gosselin.

R. ANNONA . AVG . FELIX . S. C. Abundance standing, l., holding an alabastrum and rudder. Behind, r., a pharos (probably of Ostia); in field, l. two prows of vessels, on one the modius, from which spring a poppy and four ears of corn, on the other the acrostolium. AE I. B. M.

4. . . . . K. COYAPI. ANTΩ . . . . . . Bust of Sulpicius Uranius Antoninus, r., laureate, with paludamentum.

R. ΔHMAPX. ΕΞΟΥC . . . An eagle with spread wings, standing, holding a wreath in his beak. In exergue, S. C. AE II. B. M.

The only other brass coins we have of this tyrant are those struck at Emesa in Syria. This is a new coin, and is struck at Antioch. (See pages 106, 107.)

5. IMP. C. LAELIANVS. P. F. AVG. Bust of Lælian, r., laureate, with cuirass.

R. TEMPORVM. FELICITAS. Female figure (Spain) seated on the ground, l., holding in r. hand a branch of laurel, and placing the l. on the head of a rabbit. Ν. B. M.

6. IMP. C. M. AVR. MARIVS. P. F. AVG. Bust of Marius, r., laureate, with paludamentum and cuirass.

R. CONCORDIA. MILITVM. Two hands joined. Ν. B. M.

1 It has been commonly held that the sign L on the Ptolemaic and Alexandrian series stands for ΑΥKABAN-CY. CYC. is evidently a blunder, and is probably meant for CY. CEB (Eυσεβῆς Σεβαστοῦ). (See page 121.)

2. ΔΟΜΙΤΙΑΝΟC. CEB. Head of Domitianus II. (commonly called Alexander Aemilian), r., radiate.

ΤΟΣ. Eckhel cites from Belley a coin of Vespasian with the inscription, ΛΥΚΑΒΑΝΤΟΣ ΑΕΚΑΤΟΥ, but this may well be doubted, as it is unknown to all subsequent writers. The word ΛΥΚ.[ΑΒΑΣ] occurs on a coin of Themisonium, but as a title of Apollo, ΛΥΚ. ΣΩΖΩΝ (see "Mélanges de Numismatique," p. 110, by H. W. Waddington), and we have no authority for its chronological use upon coins. The employment of a Latin L upon Greek coins as early as the time of the first Ptolemy, when the Latin language must have been utterly unknown in Egypt, is another objection to the ordinary explanation. Mr. Poole has informed me that it has been recently suggested, as he was told by Mr. Salemann, Vice-Consul for Russia at Alexandria, that the sign L on the Egyptian coins is the demotic ideographic sign for "year." That it should be some such sign of a hieroglyphic kind seems evident from the Greek ΕΤΟΣ being used in its place, as ΕΤΟΥC ΤΡΙΤΟΥ, ΕΤΟΥC ΤΕΤΑΡΤΟΥ, &c. The demotic character was used for most official acts, and therefore it would probably be adopted on the coins. The only difficulty is, that the sign does not perfectly correspond to the L on the coins, being either a simple line a little curved inwards towards the top, or else like an L with the perpendicular limb prolonged beneath the horizontal limb, which is in its centre, and not more than about a quarter of its length.
3. M.C. VHABALATHVS. AVG. Bust of Vaballathus, r., laureate, with paludamentum.
   R. . . . TORIA. AVG. Victory, walking, l., holding wreath and palm. In field, a star. AE. B. M.

4. AYT. K. OYABAΛΛAΘΟC. AΘHN. Τ. CEB. Bust of Vaballathus, r., laureate, with paludamentum.
   R. Providence standing, l., raising r. hand, and holding cornu Copiae. In field, l. and, r., L. E. ("Erotc

5. VABALATHVS. VCRIMDR. Bust of Vaballathus, r., laureate, with paludamentum.
   R. IMP. C. AVRELIANVS. AVG. Bust of Aurelian, r., radiate, with cuirass. In exergue Z. (7th mint.) AE. B. M.

6. AYT. CPωIAC. OYABAΛΛAΘΟC. AΘHNΟ. Τ. Bust of Vaballathus, r., laureate and diademed, with paludamentum. In field, l. and r., L. E. ("Erotc πέμπτρον, 5th year.)
   R. AYT. K. Λ. AYPHAΙΑΝΟC. CEB. Bust of Aurelian, r., laureate, with paludamentum and cuirass.

PLATE III.

1. CARINVS . ET . NUMERIANVS . AVGG. Heads of Carinus and Numerian, r., laureate, jugate.
   R. VICTORIA . AVGG. Victory, walking, r., holding trophy. Bil. B. M.

2. IMP . CARINVS . AVG. Bust of Carinus, l., helmeted, holding with r. hand a horse by the reins and a sceptre, and with l. a shield.
   R. MAGNIA . VRBICA . AVG. Bust of Magnia Urbica, r. Æ. B. M.

3. MAGNIA . VRBICA . AVG. Bust of Magnia Urbica, r., diademed.
   R. VENERI . VICTRICI. Venus, standing, r., holding her robe over r. shoulder with r. hand, and an apple in l. Æ. B. M.

4. DIOCLETIANVS . AVG. Busts of Diocletian and Sol, l., jugate, the former laureate, the latter with a star; the former holds in r. hand a sceptre, and in l. a shield.
   R. FELIC . TEMPOR. The four Seasons. Æ. B. M.

5. IMP . DIOCLETIANVS . AVG. Busts of Diocletian and Jupiter, r., jugate, the former laureate; before the latter, a thunderbolt.
   R. IOVI . AVGG. Jupiter, half-naked, seated, holding Victory on globe and sceptre. Æ. B. M.

6. DIOCLETIANVS . AVG. Head of Diocletian, r., laureate.
   R. CONSTANTIVS . NOB . C. Head of Constantius L, r., laureate. Æ. B. M.
DESCRIPTION OF THE PLATES.

This coin has the name and bust of Maximian I, but was without doubt struck by the usurper Carausius, to imply that his assumption of the imperial power in Britain was recognized by Diocletian and Maximian. The three G's have reference to the three Augusti. (See page 133.)

8. IMP . MAXIMIANVS . AVG. Busts of Maximian I and Hercules, r., laureate, jugate.

R. AEQVITAS . AVG.GG. The three “Monetæ” standing, each holding scales and cornu Copiæ: at the feet of each a mass of metal. Æ. B . M .

PLATE IV.

1. IMP . C . L . DOMITIVS . DOMITIANVS . AVG.

Head of Domitius Domitianus, r., laureate.

R. GENIO . POPVLI . ROMANI. The Genius of the Roman people, naked, standing, l., bearing the modius on his head, and holding patera in r. hand, and cornu Copiæ and mantle in l. At his feet, l. an eagle.

In field, r., B. In exergue, ALE. (Alexandria.) Æ (follis). B . M .

2. DOMETIANOC . CEB. Head of Domitius Domitianus, r., laureate.

R. Victory walking, r., holding wreath and palm.

In field, l. and, r., L . B . (Ἐρως δεύτερου, 2nd year.) Pot. B . M . (See page 134.)
3. CONSTANTIVS . ET . MAXIMIANVS . NB . C.
Busts of Constantius and Galerius Maximian, r., laurate, jugate, both with paludamentum, and the former with cuirass.

R. GENIO . POPVLI . ROMANI. The Genius of the Roman people, naked, the mantle flowing from r. shoulder over l. arm, standing, l., bearing the modius on his head, and holding patera and cornu Copiae. In field, l., B. In field r., a star In exergue, TR. (Treviri, Treves.) Æ (follis). B. M.

4. FAVSTAE . NOBILISSIMAE . FEMINAE. Bust of Fausta, l.

R. VENVS . FELIX. Venus, seated, l., holding globe and palm. In exergue, TR. (Treviri, Treves.) Æ, Quin. B. M.

5. FAVSTA . N. F. Bust of Fausta r.

R. Star in laurel-wreath. Æ. B. M.

These two coins were struck by Constantine the Great before Fausta became his wife, or perhaps at the marriage. Coins struck after always have the title of Augusta.

PLATE V.

1. FL . HELENA . AVGVSTA. Bust of Helena, r., with ornamented diadem.

R. SECVRITAS . REIPVBLICE (sic). Security, standing, l., holding branch in r. hand, and supporting part of her robe in l. In exergue, S . M . T. (Signata Moneta Thessalonicā.) Æ. B. M.

Struck during her lifetime by her son Constantine the Great.
2. HELENA . N. F. Bust of Helena, r.
   R. Star in laurel-wreath. Æ. B. M.

   This coin was struck by Constantine at the same time as that of the same type of Fausta. When Fausta became his wife, Helena was made Augusta, and her coins afterwards bear that title.

3. Head of Delmatius, r., bound with a diadem.
   R. DELMATIVS. CAESAR. Victory, walking, l., holding wreath and palm. In exergue, S. M. H. (Heracleiâ.) Æ. B. M.

4. FL. HANNIBALIANO. REGI. Bust of Hannibalian, r., bare, with paludamentum and cuirass.
   R. SECVRITAS. PVBLICA. River-God, seated on ground, r. holding in both hands a sceptre, on one side of him a reed, on the other an urn overturned, from which water is flowing. In exergue, CONS. S. (Constantinopolis 6.) Æ. B. M.

   This coin is remarkable for the title of "King," a designation that had never been assumed since the legendary expulsion of the Tarquins. It was given to him by his uncle, Constantine the Great, whose daughter he married, and by whom he was nominated at the same time to the government of Pontus, Cappadocia, and Lesser Armenia.

5. FL. IVL. CONSTANS . NOB. C. Bust of Constans, r., laureate, with paludamentum and cuirass.
   R. VICTORIA. CAESARVM. Victory, walking, l., holding trophy and palm. In field, l., a star. In field, r., LXXII. In exergue, S. M. AN. (Antiochiâ). Æ (solidus). B. M.

   This is a very rare and remarkable coin. LXXII (72) corresponds to OB on the coins of Constantinople and the West, and is a mark of weight, showing that 72 "solidi" were coined from one pound of gold. It was formerly in the collection of M. Dupré, and is published as such by M. Chabouillet in the "Revue Numismatique," 1849, p. 10. It afterwards passed into the hands of Mr. Wigan, who, in consideration of Mr. de Salis's great desire to possess so important a coin, exchanged it with that gentleman, from whom it came to the British Museum.

6. FL. IVL. CONSTANS. PIVS. FELIX. AVG. Bust of Constans, r., with ornamented diadem, and with paludamentum and cuirass.

R. SALVS. ET. SPES. REIVPVLICA. The Emperor standing between his two brothers, Constantine II. and Constantius: all in military dress, holding long sceptres, and resting the l. hand on their shields. In exergue, TES. (Thessalonica.) \( \mathcal{A} \) (medallion). B. M.

PLATE VI.

1. IM. CAE. MAGNENTIVS. AVG. Bust of Magnentius, r., bare, with paludamentum and cuirass.

R. SECVRITAS. REIVPVLICA. Security, standing, r., her r. hand raised to her head, and resting l. elbow on a pillar. In exergue, TR. (Treviri, Treves.) \( \mathcal{A} \) (medallion). B. M.

2. D. N. DECENTIVS. FORT. CAES. Bust of Decentius, r., bare, with paludamentum and cuirass.

R. VICTORIA. CAES. LIB. ROMANOR. Victory and a female figure who holds sceptre in l. hand, standing, holding between them a trophy. In exergue, TR. (Treviri, Treves.) \( \mathcal{A} \) (solidus). B. M.
3. D. N. VETRANIO . P. F. AVG. Bust of Vetricio, r., laureate, with paludamentum and cuirass.

R. SALVATOR . REIPVBLICAEE. The Emperor in military dress walking, l., holding the labarum, on which is the monogram of the name of Christ, and a spear; behind him, Victory walking, holding wreath, with which she is about to crown him, and a palm. In exergue, SIS. (Siscia.) 𐀆 (solidus). B. M.

4. D. N. VETRANIO . P. F. AVG. Bust of Vetricio, r., laureate, with paludamentum and cuirass.

R. VICTORIA . AVGVSTORVM. Victory walking, l., holding wreath and trophy. In exergue, SIS. (Siscia.) 𐀆. B. M.

5. D. N. VALENTINIANVS . P. F. AVG. Bust of Valentinian I, r., with ornamented diadem, and paludamentum and cuirass.

R. GLORIA . ROMANORVM. Rome, helmeted, and Constantinople, turreted, seated: the former seen in front, holding Victory on globe and sceptre; the latter in profile, l., the r. foot placed on the prow of a vessel, and holding Victory on globe and cornu Copiæ. In exergue, S. M. TR. (Signata Moneta Treveris, Treves.) 𐀆 (medallion). B. M.

This coin is in a beaded frame.
