PREFACE BY THE KEEPER OF COINS.

THIS volume of the Catalogue of the Greek Coins in the British Museum describes the coinages of Galatia, Cappadocia, and Syria.

The size of the coins is given in inches and tenths, and the weight in English grains. Tables for converting grains into grammes and inches into millimètres, as well as into the measures of Mionnet's scale, are placed at the end of the volume. A map has been prefixed, showing in red letters the position of the cities that issued coins.

The whole work has been written by Mr. Warwick Wroth, the Senior Assistant in the Department of Coins and Medals. I have carefully read the proof sheets, and have compared the coins with the descriptions in the text.

INTRODUCTION.

GALATIA.

(i.) Regal Series.

THE small regal series of Galatia consists of the coins of Deiotarus I., Brogitarus, and Amyntas.

In b.c. 64 Galatia was divided by Pompey among the principal Deiotarus I. tetrarchs of the country, namely, Deiotarus I., ruler of the Tolistobogii, Brogitarus of the Trocmi, and probably Castor of the Tectosages. Deiotarus struck bronze coins (Pl. i. 1) inscribed ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ, a title bestowed on him by Pompey and confirmed by the Senate in b.c. 59.

M. Th. Reinach* has suggested that the eagle type may allude to the fondness of Deiotarus for consulting auspices, especially the flight of eagles (Cic. De divin. I. xv. 26). A comparison with the reverse type of Brogitarus would also suggest that the eagle was a symbol of Zeus, or perhaps of Rome.

Brogitarus received the title of king in b.c. 58, and struck the Brogitarus. following silver coin :—

Amyntas, an able Galatian officer who had been placed by Antony over the Pisidians in b.c. 39, became King of Galatia Amyntas. in b.c. 36, and further received, as part of his dominions, Lycaonia, Pamphylia, Isauria, and Western Cilicia. On his death, in b.c. 25, his kingdom (with the exception of Cilicia and Pamphylia) was formed into the Roman province 'Galatia' under the government of a legatus Augusti pro praetore.*

The coinage of Amyntas chiefly consists of silver tetradrachms struck at his mint at Side, in Pamphylia (Pl. i. 2-4). These pieces bear a close resemblance to the tetradrachms of Side, current in that town before the time of Amyntas (Hill, Cat. Lycia, pll. xxvi., xxvii.), but the Nike of the reverse holds, instead of a wreath, a sceptre entwined with the regal diadem. The obverse type is the head of Athena, who had a temple at Side (Strabo, xiv., p. 667). One type of the bronze coins of Amyntas was struck at Cremna, in Pisidia (Pl. i. 9).

In most public and private collections there are to be found thin gold hectae, bearing the name of King Amyntas, attributed to Amyntas. and types exactly reproducing the types of his tetradrachms. These pieces first came into the European market about 1845-46, just before which time the tetradrachms of Amyntas†—previously unknown—had been brought to light and published. A few gold staters, exactly resembling the hectae, were shortly afterwards offered for sale. Experienced collectors of that day, such as Whittall, Ivanoff and Prokesch-Osten, raised no question as to the genuineness of these gold coins. Mr. H. P. Borrell, in 1846, sold two specimens to the British Museum at a high price, and others were included as authentic in his sale of 1852.* These pieces are struck from several dies, and there are, as in the case of the tetradrachms, two chief varieties, one in which the Nike wears a stephane, the other in which she wears the elephant-skin head-dress.

An article published by Louis Mayer in the Numismatische Zeitschrift for 1871-72, vol. iii., p. 435 ff., leaves no room for doubt that some at any rate of these gold coins were forgeries produced by an experienced goldsmith and die-cutter residing at Smyrna about 1845. Are we then to treat the whole gold coinage as spurious, or is it possible to point to any specimens as genuine money of the time of Amyntas? Mayer and Huber (Num. Zeit. iii., p. 438, note) appear to treat the whole series as false: this is also the view of Dr. Friedlaender in his Griechische falsche Münzen, p. 45; of Dr. Imhoof-Blumer (Zeit. f. Num. i., p. 334; Porträtköpfe, p. 40); of M. Babelon, and of several other numismatists of note.

The consensus of condemnation is not, however, complete, for I am informed that M. Waddington possessed a hecte which he believed to be genuine, and Mr. Head is somewhat inclined to think that two hectae in the British Museum purchased of Borrell in 1846 may be pronounced genuine, though other specimens in the Museum, notably one purchased at the Montagu Sale in 1896, lot 684, are false. It must be admitted that the Borrell hectae in the Museum (two similar specimens are in the Bibliothèque nationale)† are somewhat more satisfactory in style than the other pieces of the series in question: one may note especially that the locks of hair on the cheek of Athena are, on the Borrell specimens, treated naturally, though on other specimens (hectae and staters) they have almost the appearance of two rosettes. While pointing out this difference, I must own that it seems to me hazardous to assert that one series is false and the other genuine, so close is the resemblance in style and lettering between all the gold coins that purport to be of Amyntas. The Borrell coins in the British Museum may, on internal evidence, be more worthy of acceptance than others, yet even here we cannot point to any external evidence of provenance and pedigree in support of their antiquity.

The à priori probabilities of the case, moreover, do not seem to be in favour of the authenticity of the coins, for (i.) it is not usual to find on Greek gold coins exact reproductions of contemporary silver coins, and (ii.) it is unlikely that the Romans would have permitted Amyntas to issue money in gold.* The existence of the hectae in several different dies may perhaps seem to indicate that they are not all the work of a forger, who would hardly be likely to take the trouble to multiply dies. But the ways of forgers are strange, and it must be borne in mind that "the Becker of Smyrna" (as Mayer calls him) was an expert in his art, and that he reckoned on, and actually found, a considerable market for the different varieties.

(ii.) Civic Coinage.

Ancyra, now the well-known town Angora, was the capital of the Ancyra. Tectosages and afterwards of the Roman province of Galatia. The numerous coins of this important trade-centre are Imperial, of many different types: the most interesting pieces relate to the Games, see e.g., Pl. ii. 13, three athletes drawing lots; Pl. ii. 14, two agonistic urns; Pl. iii. 2, urn inscribed ΑΓΩΝ; Pl. iii. 3, stele inscribed with names of Games. Among the divinities, Mēn often occurs (Pl. ii. 1, 3, 5), and on one specimen the Emperor Galba is represented in the character of this god (Imhoof-Blumer, Revue suisse, v., p. 309; Perdrizet in Bull. corr. hell., 1896, p. 73). A coin of Septimius Severus in the Vienna Museum, showing Aphrodite and Eros swimming, deserves notice.* The temple represented on Pl. iii. 5, 6, 7, and on Pl. i. 12 (Koinon of Galatia) is evidently the celebrated temple at Ancyra of Rome and Augustus, on the walls of which appears the inscription known as the Monumentum Ancyranum.

Germa, a Roman colony (Colonia Julia Augusta Felix†) situated

_{Germa.} near Masut Kewi, on the lower course of the _{Tembris,}‡ has coins of the usual Colonial types.

The earliest coin of Germa, if the description in Mionnet (sup. vii., p. 644, no. 55) be correct, is of Domitian. A coin of Etruscilla, described by Mionnet (iv., p. 390, no. 103), from Tanini (Num. add. p. 441), mentions the Games 'Actia' and 'Dusaria' (cp. Head, Hist. Num., p. 630), but Eckhel (D. N. V. iii., p. 179) seems inclined to doubt the accuracy of the description.

Pessinus was the capital of the Tolistobogii, in the western part _{Pessinus.} of Galatia. Its remains lie north, south and east of

Bala-Hissar, and in the valley east of this town are the ruins of the theatre.§ Strabo mentions Pessinus (xii., p. 567)

as ἐμπόριον τῶν ταύτη μέγιστον, but the place is best known for its connection with the worship of Kybele, who was there worshipped as the 'Mother of the gods' and under the name of Agdistis.*

The priesthood of this goddess originally controlled the government of Pessinus. The Pergamene kings Eumenes II. and Attalus II. had political relations with the high-priest (who uniformly bore the name of Attis), and on at least two occasions offered him military aid.† The Pergamene rulers adorned Pessinus with a fine marble temple and grove of Agdistis, in which the goddess continued to be worshipped as late as the time of the Emperor Julian.‡

The coins of Pessinus are chiefly Imperial, though there is a small autonomous issue of bronze in the second or first century B.C. Many of the types relate to Kybele (Agdistis), who is represented seated, turreted, and attended by two lions (Pl. iv. 8). On other coins the heads of Attis and Kybele occur, the latter being characterized as ΘΕΑ ΙΛΕΑ§ and ΜΗΤΗΡ ΘΕΩΝ. Among the other types are Herakles (Pl. iv. 3); the Sangarios (Pl. iv. 4); Daedalus and Ikaros (Imhoof-Blumer, Griech. Münzen, p. 754, no. 764; pl. xiii. 15).

A coin of Tiberius bears the date ΕΤΕΙ Ν = year 50, the era being reckoned, as at Tavium, from B.C. 25, the year of the formation of the Province of Galatia.||

‡ The sacred stone representing the goddess was removed to Rome in B.C. 204.

§ ΙΛΕΑ is supposed by Dr. Von Sallet (Z. f. N., iv., 287; cp. v., 330) to be a feminine form of Θεως. See also Imhoof-Blumer, Griech. Münzen, p. 752, no. 758; pl. xiii. 12; cp. ib., p. 750, no. 748; pl. xiii. 7 (obv).

|| Imhoof-Blumer, op. cit., p. 753, no. 759; pl. xiii. 13.

Tavium was the capital of the Trocmi, the principal tribe of eastern Galatia, styled on their coins ΣΕΒΑΣΤΗ-
Tavium. ΝΩΝ ΤΡΟΚΜΩΝ. The modern Böyük Nefez

Kœui represents the site, and the cemeteries near this village are full of architectural remains.* Strabo describes the country of the Trocmi as the best part of Galatia, and at the present day it yields abundant harvests of wheat.† Tavium was the mart of that part of Galatia, and the centre from which seven roads diverged. There are indications, however, that it was less civilized and of less importance than Ancyra and Pessinus.‡

The coins are Imperial bronze, with the exception of nos. 1, 2, which appear to have been struck somewhat before the establishment of the Empire.§ Some specimens are dated from the Era B.C. 25, the year of the formation of Galatia Provincia. The principal divinity of the Trocmi was Zeus, and at Tavium, according to Strabo (xii., p. 567) were ὁ τοῦ Διὸς κολοσσὸς χαλκοῦς καὶ τέμενος αὐτοῦ ἀσυλον. An inscription found at Ancyra records a dedication [Δι]ὶ Taviumavō.|| A representation of the colossal Zeus is doubtless to be found on the coin of Caracalla figured in Pl. v. 12.

‡ Perrot, Exploration de la Galatie, p. 292.

§ Sterrett (op. cit., p. 311) "found only Roman coins at Böyük Nefez Kœui of the Caesarean [Greek Imperial?] coinage." The earliest Imperial coin represented in the British Museum is of Vespasian. Mionnet (sup., vii., p. 653, no. 94) describes, after Sestini, a coin of Tiberius. The coinage is usually said to extend to Elagabalus, but there is reason to suspect that the specimens described by Mionnet (after Vaillant) and in Mus. Nap., p. 214, no. 8653, are of the Emperor Caracalla.

|| Domaszewski in Arch.-epig. Mittheil. aus Oesterreich, ix. (1885), p. 114 f.; ep. C. I. L., iii., pt. i., nos. 1860 and 1088.

Another and less elaborate view is given in Pl. v. 2. The bull and humped bull, Pl. v. 1, 2, perhaps appear as victims offered to the Zeus of Tavium. The representations of Apollo (Pl. v. 6, 7), and of the river Halys (Pl. v. 9) are noteworthy.

not appear to have struck coins, with the exception of the satrap Datames (*circ. * The arrangement of the coins suggested by M. Th. Reinach in his admirable monograph Trois royaumes de l'Asie mineure, Paris, 1888, has been chiefly followed in this Catalogue. Useful summaries of the reigns of each king are given by Reinach (p. 12 ff.), and I have taken the liberty of abridging portions of these in the present Introduction.

Antiochis, daughter of Antiochus III., the Great, the second wife of Ariarathes IV., endeavoured to impose upon her husband two supposititious sons, Ariarathes and Orophernes, but afterwards gave birth to a legitimate son, named Mithradates, who succeeded his father under the title of Ariarathes V., Philopator.

* The coin assigned by Reinach to Ariarathes III. in T. R., p. 33, no. 6, belongs as he has subsequently pointed out (Rev. Num., 1891, pp. 365–367), to some other king, perhaps to Ariarathes IV., Eusebes.

The coinage of Ariarathes IV. consists principally of drachms bearing dates of the regnal years, with the reverse, Athena holding a figure of Nike (Pl. vi. 2), a type that becomes stereotyped in the regal series of Cappadocia. Specimens are known of the early years of his reign, but those that occur in the greatest abundance belong to the 31st, and especially to the 33rd year. M. Reinach suggests that the numerous coins of the last-named year were struck for the war-indemnity which Ariarathes had to pay to the Romans in B.C. 188, in consequence of having aided the cause of Antiochus.

Rare tetradrachms of Ariarathes are also known :—

Ariarathes V., son of Ariarathes IV. by Antiochis, in the early part of his reign incurred the enmity of Demetrius Eusebes Philopator. Soter, King of Syria, who afterwards supported the claims of the pretender Orophernes. When Orophernes seized the throne of Cappadocia, in B.C. 158, Ariarathes fled to Rome, but was soon afterwards (B.C. 157) reinstated in his kingdom by the aid of Attalus II.

Ariarathes was distinguished for his culture, and intervened successfully in the affairs of Syria, Commagene, Armenia and Pergamum. He died in B.C. 130, fighting on the side of the Romans, in the war with Aristonicus.

The coins of this king consist of tetradrachms (of which there are three principal varieties) and of a few drachms—the abundant drachm coinage of Ariarathes IV. being probably still in circulation. On the tetradrachms of the class figured in Pl. vi. 3, Ariarathes takes the titles “Eusebes” and “Philopator.” His assumption of the latter title is known to us also from Diodorus, and the coins* show that he further adopted the title of Eusebes already borne by his father. On another tetradrachm he uses the title ‘Eusebes,’ without ‘Philopator.’† On a third remarkable specimen‡ the inscription is ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΑΡΙΑΡΑΘΟΥ ΑΡΙΑΡΑΘΟΥ ΦΙΛΟΠΑΤΟΡΟΣ: this mention of the father, Ariarathes (IV.), is well supposed by Reinach (T. R. p. 39) to have been made by Ariarathes V. in order to emphasize his own legitimacy in opposition to the unfounded claims of Orophernes.

The pretender Orophernes, already referred to, issued tetradrachms with his name and the title ΝΙΚΗΦΟΡΟΥ (Pl. vi. 5).

Orophernes. The obverse of these bears a fine portrait of B.C. 158—157. Orophernes, and the reverse a figure of Nike, a type evidently chosen in reference to the surname adopted by him. The coin is only now known from a few specimens, three of which were found, together with some gold ornaments, in the ruins of the temple of Athena Polias at Priene, under the pedestal of the goddess's statue. This provenance is very interesting, as we know from the writers that Orophernes deposited a kind of reserve fund of 400 talents (about £100,000) with the Prienians, with whom he had come to be on good terms, probably during his earlier residence in Ionia. Ariarathes V., on regaining the throne that Orophernes had seized, demanded this treasure for himself, and when the Prienians refused to surrender it, invaded their territory. Ultimately it was restored to Orophernes. The tetradrachms found at Priene may possibly have formed part of this treasure, but it is more likely* that Orophernes, on receiving back his deposit, in gratitude dedicated the pedestal and the statue to Athene Polias, and had specimens of his coinage placed between the marble courses of the pedestal. The coins seem to be of the fabric of western Asia Minor, and it is probable that they were struck for Orophernes at Priene itself, of which city the owl represented on the reverse would be a suitable emblem or mint-mark.†

Ariarathes VI., the son of Ariarathes V., succeeded to the throne when a child, and ruled for a time under the tutelage of his mother, who is called by Justin Philopator. Laodice, but whose name, to judge from a unique B.C. 125?–111? coin in the Waddington collection,‡ with the united heads of the queen-regent and her son, appears to have been Nysa.

Ariarathes issued a coinage of drachms (Pl. vi. 6, 7), on which appear dates covering the period from the first to the fifteenth year of his reign§ inclusive. On these he styles himself Epiphanes, though his full title, as is known from an inscription of Delos,* was Epiphanes Philopator.

Ariarathes married Laodice, daughter of Mithradates V. Euergetes, King of Pontus, and had by her two sons (Ariarathes VII. and VIII.) and a daughter Nysa. He was assassinated by a Cappadocian named Gordios, circ. B.C. 111.

Ariarathes VII., the eldest son of Ariarathes VI. by Laodice, was a child at the time of his father's death, and his Ariarathes VII. B.C. 111?—99? throne was occupied by Nicomedes II. Epiphanes, King of Bithynia, who had married the queen-mother. Mithradates VI. Eupator, King of Pontus, restored Ariarathes, but later on put him to death and set up in his place his own son, a boy of eighteen, on whom he bestowed the name of Ariarathes (IX.). The Cappadocians subsequently Ariarathes VIII. B.C. 99?—87. revolted (B.C. 99?) against the new sovereign, and replaced him by Ariarathes VIII., the second son of Ariarathes VI. by Laodice. Ariarathes was, however, defeated by Mithradates, and on his death, soon afterwards, the male line of Ariarathes became extinct.

Ariarathes VII. issued drachms (Pl. vi. 8—10), with his title Philometor. There are no coins that can be attributed to Ariarathes VIII.†

Ariarathes IX., son of Mithradates Eupator, issued a series of drachms (Pl. vii. 2, 3, 4) with the ordinary Ariarathes IX. Eusebes Philopator. B.C. 99—87. Cappadocian types and the title Eusebes, abbreviated from his full title Eusebes Philopator, which appears on the tetradrachms minted by him, but which, as will be shown, do not strictly form part of the regal series of Cappadocia.

These drachms and tetradrachms bear the head of a diademed king, and there can be no doubt that the same personage is represented on both denominations. The head, especially on the tetradrachms (Pl. vii. 1; Imhoof-Blumer, Mon. gr., p. 420; pl. H. 9) and on the drachm of year 4 (Pl. vii. 3) resembles that of Mithradates Eupator on his Pontic coins, and Dr. Imhoof-Blumer (loc. cit.) supposes that this portrait (both on tetradrachms and drachms) is the head of Mithradates himself, and not that of his son Ariarathes IX. In favour of this view it may be especially urged that the drachms bearing the regnal year 4 were struck—supposing this year to be reckoned from B.C. 99, the year of the death of Ariarathes VII.—in B.C. 95, when Ariarathes IX. was only thirteen years old, and nevertheless bear a portrait which is certainly not that of a boy of that age.

M. Th. Reinach (T. R., p. 51 f.) argues, on the other hand, that the head on all the coins of Ariarathes IX. is that of the king himself. He contends—as I think rightly—that the portrait on these coins is not identical with that of Mithradates as known from Pontic coins, and that the resemblance is merely that between son and father. It must be admitted, no doubt, that on his early drachms Ariarathes (or rather, perhaps, his father) made himself appear older than he really was, in order to be in keeping with the heads on the obverses of the coins of his Cappadocian predecessors. Yet it appears to me that on the drachm of year 2 (Pl. vii. 2) a very youthful, though not, indeed, a boyish head is certainly intended.*

M. Reinach has also well argued that the tetradrachm (which it will be borne in mind shows the same head as the drachms) was struck by Ariarathes IX. himself, not in the early part of his reign, but in b.c. 87, when he was twenty-one. This tetradrachm differs in fabric from the earlier Cappadocian tetradrachms and also from the Pontic tetradrachms of Mithradates Eupator, which, however, it resembles on the reverse. The fabric is rather that of Macedonia, and M. Reinach accordingly interprets the monogram that appears on all the known specimens of this tetradrachm as ΑΜΦΙ, i.e. the mint of Amphipolis, a town actually seized by Ariarathes in b.c. 87, the year in which he died.

The dynasty of Ariarathes having come to an end circ. b.c. 97 with Ariobarzanes I. the death of Ariarathes VIII., two claimants to the Philoromaios. throne presented themselves, the son of Ariarathes B.C. 95—62. IX. and an adventurer, supposed to be a son of Ariarathes VI. The Roman Senate refused to admit either of these claims, and ultimately allowed the Cappadocians to elect a king themselves. The new king, Ariobarzanes I. (Pl. vii. 5-7) surnamed Philoromaios, had a long but troubled reign, during which he was repeatedly driven from his throne and again restored. He appears to have ruled from b.c. 95 to b.c. 62, when he abdicated in favour of his son.

Under Ariobarzanes I. and his successors the power and resources of the Cappadocian kingdom rapidly declined, and the rulers of this dynasty were little more than puppets in the hands of the Roman generals. The issue of drachms was continued with the types that had grown familiar under the dynasty of Ariarathes, but there was no further coinage of tetradrachms.

Ariobarzanes II. (Pl. vii. 8), son of Ariobarzanes I., became king Ariobarzanes II. by the abdication of his father in his favour Philopator. in the presence of Pompey. Valerius Maximus* B.C. 62—52. gives a striking account of the scene of abdication—of the father's joy at resigning the crown to his son, and the son's sorrowful reluctance to assume the crown of his father. Ariobarzanes II. appropriately bears the title of Philopator. His coins are drachms of years 7 and 8 and some without dates. They are much rarer than those of Ariobarzanes I.

Ariobarzanes III. was the son of Ariobarzanes II. by his wife Athenais Philostorgos II., a daughter* of Mithradates Eupator, King of Pontus. His drachms are of years 9 and 11 and bear the Pontic emblems crescent and star (Pl. vii. 9).

Ariarathes X., brother of Ariobarzanes III., was placed on the throne of Cappadocia in B.C. 42 by Antony, but in B.C. 36 was by his order put to death. His coins (Pl. vii. 11, 13) are drachms of year 5 and 6.

Archelaus Philopatris, Ktistes. B.C. 36—A.D. 17. Archelaus was chosen by Antony in B.C. 36 to replace Ariarathes X. He died in A.D. 17 and in the same year Cappadocia became a Roman province.

His coins are drachms of two principal types—

i. with reverse, Club (Pl. vii. 14).

ii. with reverse, Mount Argaeus (Reinach, T. R., p. 67; pl. iii. 24).

The club has been explained by Visconti as an allusion to the ancestry of Archelaus, who claimed descent from Temenos, son of Herakles. The Mount Argaeus is the emblem of Mazaca, afterwards Caesarea.

The drachms of class i. must have been struck, as Imhoof-Blumer has shown,† in the island of Elaeusa, which, together with Cilicia Tracheia, became part of the dominions of the Cappadocian king in B.C. 20. As the practical founder of the island-town Elaeusa Archelaus calls himself* κτιστής on his drachms. He afterwards renamed it 'Sebaste,' in honour of Augustus. The drachms are dated by the years of the reign of Archelaus which began in the autumn of B.C. 37-36. The earliest date known is year Κ (20) corresponding to B.C. 18-17.

Caesarea (now Kaisariyeh), situated at the base of Mount Argaeus.

Its original name was Mazaca, and it was the capital of the Cappadocian kings. The name Caesarea. Changes of city-name. Mazaca was changed to Eusebeia, presumably by one of the kings who bore the title of Eusebes—perhaps Ariarathes V. Eusebes, Philopator (B.C. 163-130).†

There are no coins bearing the name of Mazaca, but there are autonomous bronze pieces (infra, pp. 45, 46) of varied types, inscribed ΕΥΣΕΒΕΙΑΣ. These belong to the reign of Archelaus, the last king of Cappadocia (B.C. 36—A.D. 17).

From the excellent list compiled by Imhoof-Blumer,‡ it appears that the latest date on the coins with the name Eusebeia is '25' (regnal year of Archelaus), corresponding to B.C. 13-12.

These coins are succeeded by an autonomous series, bearing the name "Caesarea."§ The earliest known date on this 'Caesarea' series is '28' = B.C. 10-9. The change of the town-name from Eusebeia to Caesarea must, therefore, have taken place between B.C. 12 and B.C. 9, and the older views that the change took place either in A.D. 17 (when Cappadocia became a Province) or in A.D. 41,* are thus shown to be inconsistent with the numismatic evidence.†

Caesarea was not protected by walls in the age of Strabo, but the inscription ENTIXION (ἐντείχιον χωρίον) on a coin of Gordian III. seems to prove that it became a walled place at least as early as the reign of that Emperor.‡

The abundant coinage of Caesarea, extending from Tiberius to Trebonianus Gallus, bears only a superficial resemblance to the contemporary coinages of other Greek cities. This is due to the fact that Caesarea was (like Antioch) a mint for the Imperial dominions in the east.§ Coins, therefore, were struck in silver as well as in bronze,|| and were usually dated in the same manner as the Imperial money of Rome. The types are not of a local character, as elsewhere, but purely Roman and derived from Roman coins. One type, the representation of Mount Argaeus, forms almost the only exception to this rule, but even this type (as I shall endeavour to show below) seems to be brought into connection with the cultus of the Emperors.*

Mommens† has described the silver coinage of Caesarea as consisting mainly of two denominations, struck on the Weight of Coins. Phoenician standard, the didrachm, with a maximum weight of 112 grains, and the drachm, with a maximum of 56. The weights of many of the coins catalogued in the present volume are sufficiently in accordance with this standard; thus, we find didrachms weighing from about 104 to 113 grains, and drachms weighing from about 44 to 54 grains. On the other hand, there occur not a few weights which cannot be forced into agreement with the Phœnician standard. For instance, under Trajan we find

* Dr. Imhoof-Blumer, in his essay Zur griech. Münzkunde, Genf, 1898 (Revue Suisse, pl. viii.), published since the Cappadocian portion of this Catalogue was printed off, proposes (p. 34 f.) to fill a gap in the coinage of the Cilician Sebaste (originally Elaeusa) by transferring to it various silver Imperial coins usually assigned to Caesarea. The chief type in question is the Two clasped hands holding a standard resting on a prow (e.g. p. 51, no. 44; p. 57, no. 86; pl. x. 1, infra). Dr. Imhoof remarks that the type is found only at naval stations such as Corinth, Cyzicus, &c., and is not suitable to an inland town like Caesarea. This argument would, I venture to think, have greater weight if the types at Caesarea were usually chosen for their local appropriateness. But, with the exception of Argaeus, the types, including this very clasped-hands type, are borrowed (as stated above) from Roman coins, and it seems, therefore, hardly legitimate to base an argument on their local significance. The standing Eleutheria type, no. 26 in Imhoof (cp. p. 52, no. 49 infra) is also attributed to Sebaste because its obverse is almost identical with the obverse of no. 22 (clasped-hands type). The two types must stand or fall together, but it may be pointed out that the Eleutheria type has no special appropriateness for Sebaste. Imhoof would further transfer to Sebaste the Amazon bust type (Imhoof, p. 37, no. 27), as being usually found only at coast-towns. Two other types, Nike and club, may also, in Imhoof's opinion, be of Sebaste, but he suggests these latter attributions with much hesitation, especially in the case of the club when accompanied by star and crescent (e.g. pl. x. 12 infra). Dr. Imhoof's arguments for transferring all these silver coins to Sebaste deserve, of course, the most careful consideration, but, at present, I am myself inclined to follow the traditional attribution to Caesarea.

157, 166·4, 175·7, 177·2 (grains), weights which appear to represent tridrachms of 180 grains; the maximum weight of the drachm would thus be 60 rather than 56 grains. We find, in fact, 'drachms' of Trajan actually weighing more than Mommsen's maximum of 56 grains, namely 59·4, and even 61 and 62 grains.

The normal weights would seem, therefore, to be as follows:—

Tridrachm,	180	grains.
Didrachm,	120	"
Drachm,	60	"
Half-drachm,	30	"

The purity of the silver is well maintained till the time of Sept. Severus, when the metal becomes debased; but evidently no great attention was bestowed upon the exact adjustment of the weights—the tridrachm sometimes weighs as little as 150 grains, the didrachm 85, the drachm 40, and the half-drachm 20.

The silver money is at first dated, as on the coins of Alexandria in Egypt, by the years of the Emperor's reign.

Dates. From Trajan to Commodus the date is usually recorded by inscribing the year of the consulship of the reigning Emperor. Dating by regnal years is still, however, occasionally to be found. From the time of Sept. Severus onwards the date is given in regnal years, but the silver coins of Elagabalus form an exception to this rule. The bronze coins are generally dated by regnal years, but occasionally (as under Trajan) by the year of the consulship and Tribunicia Potestas.

The principal type of the coins is the Mount Argaeus, the many varieties of which are discussed below. The re-

Types. remaining types nearly all refer in some way to the Emperors and divinities of Rome, and many, as already stated, are directly copied from Roman coins. One type, the club, which occurs with some frequency under many Emperors, does not appear to be Roman, and is probably derived from the club of the coins of King Archelaus (cp. Pl. vii. 14 with Pl. ix. 22), by whom it may have been introduced in allusion to his descent from Temenos, son of Herakles.* On a coin of Hadrian with the club type (Pl. x. 12) a star and crescent appear in the field, as if the type were in some way connected with Mount Argaeus, which is sometimes represented with a star and crescent near its summit (Pl. x. 6).

The great mountain Argaeus—still called Erjäus†—rises from the plain to a height of over 13,000 feet. The Mount Argaeus. ascent begins over lava and basalt, and numerous craters are seen about the base and on the flanks; Strabo says that in his day flames had been seen to issue from the fissures at the base of Argaeus. Higher up, two plateaus are reached, planted with gardens and vineyards: in antiquity the sides of the mountain were covered with groves of forest-trees. Below the summit is an extensive snow-field.

The coins of Caesarea (Pll. viii.—xiii.) represent Argaeus as a cavernous, many-peaked mountain, and some specimens reproduce the three indentations into which its rugged summit is split. Sometimes the sides appear to be covered with trees (Pl. xi. 4; Imhoof-Blumer, Monn. Gr., p. 417, no. 183; pl. H., no. 1), and a tree is conventionally represented on the face of the mountain (Pl. x. 17). In the same conventional manner, animals (probably a dog chasing a goat or stag) are represented on the mountain (Imhoof-Blumer, loc. cit.; Pl. x. 18 infra).‡

Argaeus does not appear on the coins of Caesarea merely as a conspicuous physical object, but as being a mountain invested with especial sanctity. To quote the suggestive sentence of Maximus of Tyre (Diss. viii. 8), Argaeus was ὁρος Καππαδόκαις, καὶ θεὸς, καὶ ὅρκος καὶ ἄγαλμα. On Pl. xi. 18; xii. 1 and 7 and elsewhere, we see an ἄγαλμα of Argaeus placed on an altar; on Pl. xii. 12 it appears in a temple,* and a temple is seen in close proximity to the mountain on Pl. xii. 3. To whom then was this mountain sacred? A coin of Caesarea in the French Collection,† shows an ἄγαλμα of Argaeus held by the god Sarapis, but it would be unsafe to infer from the type that this divinity had any special connection with the mountain, for it is an exceptional type, and probably only indicates that Sarapis was (in the time of Severus Alexander) an important divinity at Caesarea, of which city he displays the well-known symbol.

A better clue would be furnished by identifying the naked male figure, who on so many of the coins (Pl. viii. 8, 12; ix. 7; xi. 11) is seen on the summit of the mountain. This figure holds sceptre and globe, and being radiate, has been sometimes described as Helios. There is some evidence to support this view,‡ but after a assigned to Tarsus, but now well attributed by Loebbecke and by Imhoof-Blumer to Caesarea, a stone of pyramidal form appears as type, possibly symbolical of the mountain Argaeus. A list of these coins is given by Imhoof, Zur griech. Münzkunde (1898), pp. 18, 19. The British Museum has the following : 1. Obv. Head of Tyche r., turreted. Rev. ΕΤ A Stone of pyramidal form. AE 55. 2. Similar types: on rev. ΕΤΙ BAC COY ΕΤ[?]. AE 65. 3. Similar types: on rev. ΕΤΙ OMOY ΛΟΥ (partly obscure); in ex., ΕΤ I[F] AE 55.

* Cp. pl. xxxiii. 3 (Seleucia Pieria), an ἄγαλμα of Mount Kasios, rather than the mountain itself.

† Blanchet in Rev. Num., 1895, p. 74; pl. iii. 15.

‡ i. The figure has the attributes of Helios. ii. A radiate Helios [Emperor?], seated on a rock, occurs on various coins of Caesarea, e.g. Pl. xi. 7. iii. Stars (Pl. x. 7, 17) and a crescent and star (Pl. x. 6) appear in connection with the mountain: cp. A. H. Smith, Cat. of Gems in the Brit. Mus., nos. 1105, 1106; cp. also Rev. arch., 1896, tom. 28, ser. iii., p. 255 (metal seal).

survey of the whole series of Argaeus types, I am inclined to think that the personage represented is the deified Emperor. The representation is as well suited to the divus Augustus as to Helios, and the Roman character of the coin-types of Caesarea renders it likely that the worship of the Emperor would find a place among them. A connection between Argaeus and the deceased Emperor would certainly seem to be indicated on a coin of Caesarea in the Berlin Museum (Zeit. f. Num. xi. 52; pl. i. 5), where we find a temple (with star in pediment) inscribed ΕΙC ΘΑΝΑΤΟΥC (ια?) KYPIOY, and surmounted by Mount Argaeus. This coin was struck by Caracalla, in the year in which his father Sept. Severus died.

It must be further noted that on many of the coins—including one of the earliest—Argaeus is surmounted by an eagle (Pl. viii. 1), which would appear to be the Roman eagle, for on the type as shown in Pl. xiii. 1 the bird holds a wreath just as the Roman eagle does on coins of Antioch, and two Roman standards are erected near the mountain. The wreath that surmounts the summit on other coins (Pl. ix. 2; x. 8; xiii. 3) is presumably the wreath which is here held by the eagle. An eagle appears on the front of the Argaeus-altar in Pl. xi. 13 (Sept. Severus).

On a coin of Caracalla (Imhoof-Blumer, Monn. Gr., p. 419, no. 191; cp. infra, Pl. xi. 19; xii. 3) two urns employed in local games named after Imperial persons are brought into juxtaposition with Argaeus.

The Roman Emperor, then, is the presiding genius of the mountain,* but it can hardly be doubted that before the Imperial age some local divinity—perhaps a mountain-god—was worshipped in connection with Argaeus. A trace of some such primitive divinity is probably to be found in the curious simulacra which stand, protected by palisades, beside Argaeus on the coin of Severus Alexander in Pl. xiii. 2.

* In some comparatively rare types two or more figures (Imperial personages?) appear on the summit: see Imhoof-Blumer, Monn. gr., p. 419, no. 192; pl. H 5; cp. infra, Pl. xi. 19; xii. 7.

Comana, now at Sherherdere-si, on the Sarus, reckoned three days' journey from Caesarea,* was a place of importance, with a powerful priesthood and six thousand temple-slaves dedicated to the service of the goddess Mâ. No coins, however, can with certainty be attributed to it.†

Cybistra, now Eregli,‡ had a small issue of bronze in the reign of Trajan, reverse types, harpa (Pl. xiii. 8); river-god swimming (Drexler in Z. f. N. xiv. 119 = Fox, Engravings, &c. ii., pp. 28, 29, no. 155).

Tyana, now Kiz (or Kilisa) Hissar, a village a few miles distant from the towns of Bor and Nigde.§ The coins are Tyana. Imperial—dated by regnal years—with one principal type, the Tyche of the city holding ears of corn and grapes (Pl. xiii. 10), doubtless in allusion to the extensive and fertile plain that surrounded Tyana. Perseus and Asklepios also occur as types.

From the numismatic evidence it appears that the city became a Roman colony in the time of Caracalla, under the title “Antoniniana”: see coins of Domna and Caracalla infra, pp. 98, 99, ANT. ΚΟΛΩΝΙΑ ΤΒΑΝΩΝ (no. 12) and no. 15, a variety reading AVP ΚΟΛΩΝΙΑC· ΤΒΑΝΩΝ. (Cp. AYP. ANT., &c., on the Waddington coin: Babelon, Inventaire somm., p. 407.)

* Ramsay in Journal of Philology, xi., 1882, p. 145 f.

† See Babelon, Mélanges, i. 55. M. Babelon (Rois de Syrie, p. cxcviii., cp. p. cxi.) thinks that a coin of Zariadres, King of Armenia, may have been struck at Comana. The coins attributed by Imhoof-Blumer in Griech. Münzen, p. 709 (with Artemis-head and IEP), to Komana-Hieropolis have since been assigned by him to Hierakome in Lydia (Revue Suisse, v., p. 309).

ARMENIA.

Three Armenian rulers only (in addition to Tigranes) are represented in the British Museum.

Bronze coins, with reverse types, Athena (Pl. xiv. 1) and Nike bear the title and effigy of Xerxes, who must be identified with the Xerxes mentioned by Polybius (Excerpta, viii. 25) as ruling at Arsamosata in the time of the Syrian king Antiochus, probably Antiochus IV. Epiphanes,* who exacted from him a contribution of 3,000 talents, 1,000 horses, and 1,000 mules.

Artavasdes I., son of Tigranes the Great, whom he succeeded as King of Armenia, circ. B.C. 56. In B.C. 34 he was taken prisoner by Antony, whom he had treacherously deserted at the time of the invasion of Media, and was sent captive to Alexandria (his son Artaxias II. being placed on the throne), and in B.C. 30 was put to death by order of Cleopatra. He issued drachms (Pl. xiv. 2), and bronze with reverse, Nike (Babelon, Rois de Syrie, p. 215, no. 25; pl. xxix. 16).

The silver coin, Pl. xiv. 3, bearing the heads of the Emperor Augustus and of a King Artavasdes, was first published by Prof. Percy Gardner (Num. Chron. 1872, p. 9 ff.), who is somewhat inclined to date it earlier than B.C. 6, and to assign it to the Artavasdes (II.) who, according to Tacitus, was raised to the throne by the order of Augustus. M. Babelon (Rois de Syrie, p. ccvi.), whose attribution is here followed, assigns it to the Artavasdes (III.) who was son of Ariobarzanes, and King of Media and Armenia from circ. A.D. 2 to A.D. 10.

* As to the identity of this Antiochus, see Babelon, Rois de Syrie, p. cxlv.

SYRIA.

KOINON OF SYRIA.

The assembly (κοινόν) of the Province of Syria is first mentioned in an inscription of the time of Domitian, in connection with the Games celebrated under its authority every five years at Antioch. The coins inscribed KOINON CYPIAC (Pl. xiv. 6) are of the time of Trajan, and were doubtless struck at Antioch. (See "Le Koinon de Syrie," by E. Beurlier in Rev. Num. 1894, p. 286 f.)

COMMAGENE.

The coinage of the kingdom of Commagene in northern Syria begins, practically, with Mithradates I. Callinicus. Commagene. Previous to his reign we find bronze coins issued Samos, by a king named Samos,* who is conjectured to circ. B.C. 140—130. have ruled about B.C. 140—130, and to have founded Samosata on the Euphrates, the capital of Commagene. On these coins, which are in the Vienna and Paris collections, Samos bears the titles θεοσεβής and δίκαιος.†

Mithradates I. Callinicus, who is known from coins and inscriptions, married Laodice Thea Philadelphos, the daughter Mithradates I. of Antiochus VIII. (Grypus), King of Syria. Callinicus. circ. B.C. 96. M. Babelon (Rois de Syr., pp. ccx. f.) has shown good reasons for attributing to this Mithradates—rather than, as Otto Blau proposed, to another Mithradates, son of Antiochus III.,

* This, and not Sames, is the correct form of the name: see Th. Reinach in Rev. des études gr., 1890, p. 373.

the Great, by Antiochis—the bronze coins here described (Pl. xiv. 7), with rev. Athena, as well as the two series with obv. Eagle and palm, and rev. caduceus and rev. palm.*

Antiochus I. Theos,† succeeded his father, Mithradates I. Callinicus, circ. B.C. 69, at the time of the defeat of Antiochus I. Tigranes by the Romans. He is afterwards found Theos. circ. 69–31 B.C.? at war with Pompey, but he made peace with him in B.C. 64. Pompey at that time gave him, as an addition to the kingdom of Commagene, part of Mesopotamia. During the Civil War between Caesar and Pompey, Antiochus rendered assistance to the latter. In B.C. 38 his capital, Samosata, was besieged by Antony, but Antony withdrew from the siege, after compelling Antiochus to pay an indemnity.

Antiochus must have died at some time before B.C. 31, in which year we find a Mithradates king of Commagene. On a height of Mount Taurus, now the tumulus of Nemroud Dagh, Antiochus had established a sacred precinct—a ἱεροθέσιον, which he designed as his own burial-place. There he erected statues of Zeus-Oromasdes, Apollo-Mithra-Helios-Hermes, Artagnes-Herakles-Ares, of ‘Commagene,’ and of himself and his ancestors. He also issued elaborate directions for the celebration of festivals and sacrifices in honour of the gods and of his own birthday and accession.‡

His coins are of bronze, and bear the simple title ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ. In the inscriptions found at his Mausoleum at Nemroud Dagh he is styled Βασιλεὺς μέγας Ἀντίοχος Θεὸς Δίκαιος Ἐπιφανὴς Φιλοράματος καὶ Φιλέλλην. On the obverse of Pl. xiv. 8 is a portrait of the king, wearing an Armenian tiara of the same shape as that worn by him on the various sculptured reliefs from Nemroud Dagh, on which he is represented grasping the hand of a divinity—Apollo-Helios, Zeus, Herakles, Tyche (see Humann and Puchstein, op. cit., Pl. 38, 39). The tiara on the coins is decorated with a star between two eagles, an ornamentation already found on the tiara of Tigranes, King of Armenia.* On the reliefs, the tiara is ornamented with a lion, and a lion appears as the reverse-type of the coins of Antiochus (Pl. xiv. 8), and also on the money of Samosata. Whatever be the true explanation of the lion type on Greek coins generally, it must here be regarded as having an astrological meaning, when we compare it with “The Horoscope of Antiochus,” a remarkable relief from Nemroud Dagh,† which represents a star-spangled lion with three large stars above his back, accompanied by the inscription Πυρόεις Ἡρακλ[έους], Στιλβων' Απόλλωνος, Φαέθων Διός, indicating the planets Mars, Jupiter and Mercury. Antiochus, as born under the zodiacal sign of the lion, adopts this animal as the type of his coins. Humann and Puchstein (p. 330 n.) well point out that in the kingdom of Commagene a good deal of importance must have been attached to astrology, for the coins of Antiochus IV. have as types the capricorn and the scorpion, the zodiacal sign under which, according to Claudius Ptolemaeus (Tetrabibl. ii. 3), Commagene stood.

There is a gap in the regal coinage between the death of Antiochus I. and the accession of Antiochus IV.

Antiochus IV.

year placed on the throne his intimate friend Antiochus IV. Epiphanes, assigning to him, in addition to Commagene, the maritime districts of Cilicia. Antiochus was subsequently deposed by Caligula, though he regained his throne under Claudius (A.D. 41). In the reign of Nero he supported the Romans against the Parthians. He espoused the cause of Vespasian when proclaimed Emperor in A.D. 70, and sent troops to Titus during the siege of Jerusalem. In B.C. 72 he was accused of conspiring with the Parthians against Rome, and in that year was deprived of his kingdom. The last years of his life were spent at Rome.

The coins of Antiochus IV. were struck not only in Commagene but also at Anemurium, Celenderis, Corycus (Rev. Num. 1898, p. 163), and in the island of Sebaste,* in Lacanatis and Cetis.† The evidence of the coins shows that Lycaonia formed part of his dominions (Pl. xv. 2). The principal types are the scorpion and the capricorn (Pl. xiv. 9, 10) already referred to under Antiochus I.

Certain silver coins, with the name and types of Chios, bear the inscription ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΑΝΤΙΟΧΟΥ ΔΩΡΟΝ. These pieces are in style and character of the first century A.D., and Dr. Imhoof-Blumer‡ has well suggested that they were struck from the proceeds of a gift made to Chios by Antiochus IV. of Commagene.

The bronze coins of Iotape, wife of Antiochus IV., were struck in Commagene (Pl. xv. 4), Lacanatis (Babelon,

On the surrender of Antiochus IV., his sons Epiphanes and Callinicus for a short time made head against the Epiphanes and Romans. Epiphanes had, however, to seek refuge Callinicus. with the Parthian King Vologeses I., and finally came to Rome, where he lived with his father. The kingdom of Commagene was then again made part of the Roman Province of Syria (A.D. 72).

A rare bronze coin in the French Collection bears the titles and

This may well have been struck after the deposition of Antiochus IV.

It has been generally assumed that the coins described infra,
 p. 110 f., nos. 1—10 (Pl. xv. 5, 6), were also issued by Epiphanes and Callinicus after their father had been deposed. This seems to me doubtful, for it will be observed that none of the coins bear names and regal titles, but simply the inscription ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩC

* Fig. 47, ib., given, after Visconti, as a coin of Iotape of Selinus, has been shown by Dr. Imhoof-Blumer, Zur griech. Münzkunde (Genf, 1898), p. 34 (Revue Suisse, viii.), to be a mis-read coin of Hermocapelia, not struck by Iotape. Iotape is also represented on coins of Antiochus IV. struck at Sebaste in Cilicia (Imhoof-Blumer, Zur griech. Münzkunde (Genf, 1898), p. 33, nos. 20, 21 (Rev. Suisse, viii.).

ΥΙΟΙ.* Moreover, the very youthful representation of Epiphanes and Callinicus—two heads in cornuacopiae—evidently points to an earlier date than the coin in the French Collection with their names and portraits. I believe that these coins were issued during the reign of Antiochus IV. and that they formed a kind of family coinage, in which also his wife Iotape was permitted to share. They were struck, like those actually bearing the name of Antiochus IV., not only in Commagene, but also in Lacanatis and Lycaonia.†

The series of small bronze coins inscribed ΚΟΜΜΑΓΗΝΩΝ

(p. 112), but without the titles of a king or emperor, Coins inscribed ΚΟΜΜΑ requires a brief notice. No. 4 (uninscribed) bears ΓΗΝΩΝ the types of capricorn and scorpion introduced by Antiochus IV., King of Commagene, A.D. 38-72, and

no. 1 has an anchor, which also occurs on coins of this ruler (see note, p. 107 infra). These coins, therefore, are probably not earlier than the accession of Antiochus IV. (A.D. 38). But the Armenian tiara (no. 7) first appears as a type on the coins of Epiphanes and Callinicus, circ. A.D. 72, and as the whole series seems to me to be somewhat later in style and fabric than the money of Antiochus IV., I have assigned it to circ. A.D. 72, the year in which Commagene was incorporated with the Province of Syria. The ΠΙΣΤΙΣ type (no. 1; Pl. xv. 7) would—if this date be correct—indicate the era of peace inaugurated by this political arrangement.‡ Samosata was probably the mint-place of these coins.

* Cp. a bronze coin in Leake, *Num. † Babelon, Rois de Syr., p. 223, no. 46.

‡ If the coins are assigned to the reign of Antiochus IV. the ΠΙΣΤΙΣ type will refer to the friendly relations which subsisted between Antiochus and several Emperors—Caligula in A.D. 38, Claudius in A.D. 41, and Vespasian in A.D. 70.

The site of Doliche (Ptol. v. 15, 10) is at Duluk, two hours north-west of Aintab (Wilson, Handbook of Asia Minor, Doliche. p. 287). The coins are of the time of M. Aurelius and Commodus, and bear a simple laurel-wreath on the reverse: they make no allusion to the principal divinity of Doliche—the god who as Jupiter Dolichenus was worshipped at Rome and in the western provinces. A relief representing this god in the usual manner, i.e. standing upon a bull and holding the thunderbolt (and double-axe?), was found at, or near, Marash.‡

Germanicia Caesarea, now Marash,§ issued Imperial coins (M. Aurelius—Commodus) mainly resembling those of Doliche. The criteria for distinguishing the coins of this place from those of Caesarea Germanica in Bithynia (with KAICAPΕΙΑC ΓΕΡΜΑΝΙΚΗC) were first pointed out by Mr. Head in Hist. Num., p. 653 (cp. Imhoof-Blumer, Griech. Münzen, p. 597 f.).

Samosata, a strong city on the right bank of the Euphrates, was the capital and residence of the kings of Commagene. Samosata. The modern village of Samsat occupies the south-eastern corner of the ancient site.

‡ Humann and Puchstein, Reisen, p. 399.

§ Ramsay, Hist. Geog., p. 276 ff.; Wilson, Handbook, p. 263.

The earliest coins bearing the name of Samosata may be assigned, as M. Babelon* has suggested, to the period intervening between the reigns of Antiochus I. and Antiochus IV. The possibility of their belonging to the reign of Antiochus IV. is, perhaps, not quite to be excluded.

The series with Imperial heads begins under Hadrian, and on these coins the city has the epithet of 'Flavia,' derived from the Emperor Vespasian, in whose reign the kingdom of Commagene was attached to the Province of Syria. In the houses of Samsat inscriptions and tiles may be seen of Legio XVI., Flavia Firma.

The principal type of the autonomous coins is a lion—a device employed by Antiochus I. on his money (see supra, 'Antiochus I.'). The other chief type, both on the autonomous and Imperial coins, is a personification of Samosata, usually holding ears of corn (Pl. xvi. 10), and thus symbolizing the fertility of Commagene, noted by Strabo. At the feet of Samosata is the river-god Euphrates, whose place is taken, from the time of Elagabalus onwards, by a running Pegasos (Pl. xvi. 9), a substitution not easily explained, unless we suppose that the Pegasos is symbolical of some noted spring in or near Samosata. A spring is mentioned as at present existing south of the village of Samsat.† On the other hand, the Pegasos may be unconnected with the seated figure of Samosata, and may be an astrological symbol of the same kind as the capricorn which appears in the exergue of the later coins of Zeugma (Pl. xvi. 13), and the ram on coins of Cyrrhus (reign of Philip).

* Rois de Syr., p. ccxv.

† See the Plan of Samosata in Humann and Puchstein, Reisen, p. 182.

Zeugma stood on the right bank of the Euphrates, opposite Apamea (Birejik). Both towns were founded by Zeugma. Seleucus I, and a bridge of boats connected them. Birejik is at the present day one of the most important crossings of the Euphrates.*

The coins are Imperial (Antoninus Pius—Philip jun.). The usual type is a temple, with the peribolos encircling (apparently) the sacred grove (Pl. xvi. 11, 13, 14). On a few specimens a crescent is seen above the temple, and this would seem to indicate that the building was dedicated to a lunar divinity; a much larger number of specimens, however, show within the temple a seated statue, which appears to be of Zeus. On the coins of Elagabalus and the Philips a capricorn is seen in the exergue. This is, perhaps, a symbol of the city, corresponding to the ram on coins of Cyrrhus (time of Philip), and to the Pegasos in the exergue of late coins of Samosata.†

CYRRHESTICA.

Beroea, now Aleppo (Haleb). The coins are bronze (Trajan—Antoninus Pius), with the ‘wreath’ type and numerals Beroea. A—H. These numerals, both here and at other Syrian towns do not appear to indicate regnal years, but are probably marks of the successive issues of the mint in each reign.‡

and rev. Zeus standing, holding wreath; also rev. Athena standing, holding Nike. The latter type is called by Babelon Athena Parthenos; Six* supposes that it is intended for the Athena Cyrrhestis, whose temple is mentioned by Strabo (xvi., p. 751).

The Imperial coins (Trajan—Philip) have the ‘wreath’ type, or the more interesting type of a seated figure of Zeus (holding his thunderbolt, and with an eagle at his feet), who is identified by the accompanying inscription as Zeus Kataibates (Pl. xvii. 4, 6). This divinity—the god who descends in lightning and thunder†—was known in various parts of the Greek world, and his altars were to be seen (for instance) at Olympia‡ and Athens. Rocks and other places struck by lightning were regarded as sacred to him, and rocks in Melos are inscribed Διὸς Καταιβάτα.§ It will be noticed that at Cyrrhus (Pl. xvii. 4) the god is seated on a rock.||

The ruins of Hieropolis cover a large area at the modern Membij Hieropolis. (Arab.) or Bembij (Turk.). successors of Seleucus—Antiochus IV.—bronze coins were struck at Hieropolis with the head (without titles) of the king, and a representation of Zeus holding a wreath and accompanied by a bull.* This is evidently the Greek rendering of the god Baal Kevan, who is called Zeus in the De dea Syria.† No coins with the name of Bambyce are known to exist, but a series of silver coins, bearing in Aramaic letters the name of a Syrian ruler, Abd-Hadad, and representations of the goddess Atergatis, have been attributed by Waddington,‡ Six§ and Babelon || to Bambyce at the period when it was under the government of a sacerdotal dynasty, circ. b.c. 332. Silver coins of a similar character, but bearing the name ‘Alexander’—apparently Alexander the Great¶—may also be assigned with much probability to Bambyce. One of these is catalogued infra, p. 138, no. 1 (Pl. xvii. 7).

The Imperial coins are bronze (some without Emperors’ heads) extending from Trajan to Philip. The earlier pieces are of the Antioch ‘wreath’ type, with dates. Under Caracalla, several interesting types occur, especially Atergatis riding on a lion (Pl. xvii. 15), or enthroned between two lions (Pl. xvii. 14, 17), and sometimes holding the tympanum of Kybele. Another coin of Caracalla (Imhoof-Blumer, Griech. Münzen, p. 759, no. 772) shows a lofty temple, within which is a Roman standard; on one side of the standard is Baal Kevan seated between two oxen, and on the other, Atergatis seated between two lions. CHALCIDICE.

There were at least two towns in northern Syria bearing the name of Chalcis.† i. Chalcis near Beroea (Aleppo), Chalcis.
(Kinnesrin.) generally placed at the modern Kinnesrin, south of Aleppo, on the river Kowaik. ii. Chalcis sub Libano (mod. Anjar) near Heliopolis, the capital of a region governed by tetrarchs. In numismatic works, Chalcis sub Libano has been usually included in ‘Chalcidice’ or ‘Chalcidene,’ but both geography and history seem to demand that it should be classed with the towns of Coele-Syria, as in the present Catalogue.

The bronze coins bearing the names of the tetrarchs Ptolemy, Lysanias, &c., belong, of course, to Chalcis sub Libano. The bronze coin Pl. xxxiii. 10, obv. Head of Zeus, rev. Conical stone in temple, may on account of the resemblance of its obverse to coins of the tetrarchs be also assigned to Chalcis sub Libano.

The attribution of the Imperial bronze inscribed ΦΛ. ΧΑΛΚΙΔΕΩΝ is more difficult (Pl. xviii. 1). De Saulcy (loc. cit.) and Mr. Head (Hist. Num.) assign them to the first Chalcis (Kinnesrin). The thick fabric, the presence of numerals and the Antioch ‘wreath’ type on these coins are characteristic of the money of Beroea, of the towns of Cyrrhestica and Commagene, and the attribution to the Chalcis near Beroea seems, therefore, highly probable. This attribution has been adopted here, though it has occurred to me that the type of some of the coins inscribed ΦΛ.ΧΑΛΚΙΔΕΩΝ, a radiate figure of Helios with the inscription ΗΛΙΟCΕΙPOC,* is more appropriate to the Chalcis (sub Libano) situated near Heliopolis.

The coins here assigned to Chalcis (Kinnesrin) bear the numerals A, B, Δ, which Eckhel—who discusses their meaning at Chalcis, Beroea and other towns—is inclined to consider as numerals of uncertain meaning [perhaps issues of the mint] rather than as dates of the years of the reigning Emperor.†

PALMYRA.

“Palmyra urbs nobilis situ, divitiis soli et aquis amoenis, vasto undique ambitu harenis includit agros ac velut Palmyra. terris exempta a rerum natura, privata sorte inter duo imperia summa Romanorum Parthorumque et prima in discordia semper utrinque cura” (Pliny, N.H., v. 25).

Palmyra is first mentioned—at least under that name—in connexion with the attempt of M. Antonius to capture it. At that time it was already a flourishing place. Under the earlier

* See descriptions in Mionnet. The god is apparently not elsewhere named: see Roscher, Lexikon, s.v.

† If a coin in Mion., sup. viii., p. 115, no. 1, is correctly read $\overline{\epsilon}\tau\epsilon$ the numerals at Chalcis must indicate regnal years, but possibly it is a misreading for $\kappa\epsilon$. Coins of Trajan and Hadrian bear the numerals $\kappa\epsilon$ (25), which Eckhel (following Norris) has shown to date from an Era A.D. 92. This Era perhaps commemorates the bestowal upon the town of the title ‘Flavia,’ which the coins prove that it bore.

Roman Emperors it enjoyed a certain administrative independence and was embellished, probably in the time of Hadrian, with fine buildings and colonnades. The inhabitants at this period called themselves Ἀδριανοπόλιται (Steph. Byz.), and the Roman name of the city appears to have been 'Hadriana Palmyra.' It became a colonia not later than the reign of Gordian III. and probably at an earlier date, for in the time of Ulpian, i.e. under Caracalla, it is mentioned as being in possession of the jus Italicum, and the context implies that it was also a colonia at that date. M. Waddington supposes that it became a colony under Sept. Severus,* though he rightly rejects as unreliable the numismatic evidence that has been usually regarded as proving that it was a colonia in the reign of Caracalla. The later and best known period in the history of Palmyra concerns the numismatist solely through the money of Vaballathus and Zenobia, struck at Alexandria in Egypt, and already described in the British Museum Catalogue of the Coins of Alexandria.

The coins of Palmyra are small bronze pieces sometimes inscribed with the name of the city.† Many of the uninscribed coins attributed to Palmyra have been procured from its ruins, and are analogous in type and fabric to the inscribed specimens. De Sauly engraves numerous examples in his Terre Sainte (pl. xxiv., xxv., p. 60 f.), and in Mélanges de num., ii. (1877), p. 335 f., pl. xiii. The types are varied.‡ The radiate and

‡ De Sauly (Annuaire de la soc. franc. de num., v., p. 461 f.) publishes the following coin in silver:—Obv. Bull walking r.; above, crescent. Rev. Horse walking r., looking back. ₣ 1 gramme 65, diam. 11 millimètres sur 10. The bearded head (p. 149, no. 3, infra) would appear to be the Malach Belos worshipped* at Palmyra, while no. 6 is Atergatis, who is best known as ‘the Syrian goddess’ of Hieropolis in Cyrrhestica, but who was also honoured at Palmyra. A Palmyrene inscription† mentions sacrifices and offerings to [Ma]λαχβήλω κ[αὶ Ἀτεργ]άτει, πατρώις θεοῖς.

Extant Palmyrene coins are as a rule badly preserved and poorly executed. De Saulcy describes many of his specimens as of “fabrique médiocre, très mauvaise fabrique, fabrique détestable.” It is therefore difficult to determine the period of issue. None of the coins bear the Imperial effigy or titles, and the fabric (with bevelled edges) of some specimens, e.g. our nos. 1 and 2, might seem to suggest that they were coined before the establishment of the Empire. On the other hand, the bevelled edges (and the ‘palm’ type) are familiar to us from Jewish coins of the first century A.D., and, on the whole, it seems best to assign the Palmyrene coins—at any rate those that are represented in the British Museum—to the first and second centuries A.D. and to the time of Sept. Severus and his family. A more exact determination of date is certainly desirable, but the adoption of this long period of issue will allow for possible coinages under the early empire, under Hadrian (the Palmyrene ‘Renaissance’), and under Sept. Severus and his family, when Palmyra probably coin (or a description of it) was communicated to De Saulcy by his friend M. Peretié. I have not seen the original, and De Saulcy does not raise any doubt as to its genuineness. At the same time it is a somewhat suspicious circumstance that its types are identical with those of a bronze coin of Palmyra (figured, De Saulcy, Terre Sainte, pl. xxv., no. 6). As the bronze coin is in all probability of the Imperial age, this silver piece should be of the same period—a period during which a silver coinage would be hardly likely to occur.

became a colonia. Some comparatively rare coins procured by De Saulcy from Palmyra, and attributed (Mélanges de num., ii., pl. xiii., nos. 1 and 2) on good grounds to the city, have the well-known ‘Colonial’ type of Marsyas.

SELEUCIS AND PIERIA.

The great city of Antioch* was founded by Seleucus I. Nikator, in b.c. 300, and was much enlarged by his successors.

Antioch on the Orontes. It became a mint-place of the Seleucid kings at (i.) Seleucid series. least as early as the time of Antiochus IV.,† and the coins have common Seleucid types, such as Tyche seated, and Zeus.

About the middle of the second century b.c. a series of bronze coins dated according to the Seleucid Era, and bearing the inscription ΑΔΕΛΦΩΝ ΔΗΜΩΝ, was struck for the tetrapolis of Antioch, Apamea, Laodicea ad mare and Seleucia Pieria (Pl. xviii. 5-8).

During the first century bronze coins were issued at Antioch, with types Zeus, head of the Tyche of Antioch, Tripod, &c., and with dates (α) of the Seleucid, (β) of the Caesarian Era. There is a silver coinage with the heads of M. Antonius and Cleopatra (Pl. xix. 3). The Egyptian queen is represented adorned with a profusion of pearls.

* The most recent writer on Antioch is R. Förster, “Antiochia am Orontes,” in Jahrbüch des kaiserl. deutschen archaeol. Inst., xii., Berlin, 1897, p. 103 f.: see also Perdrizet and Fossey in Bull. corr. hell., 1897, p. 79 f.

† Possibly first under Antiochus III., the Great, as Babelon suggests in Rois de Syr., p. lxxxvi. Antiochus III. made an important enlargement of the city (Förster, op. cit., p. 116). On the Seleucid coins of Antioch, see Gardner, Brit. Mus. Cat. Seleucid Kings, and Babelon, op. cit., index, s.v., “Antioche (près Daphné).”

The Imperial coinage of Antioch consists (i.) of bronze pieces of small module, without Emperors' heads; (ii.) of silver and bronze coins bearing the heads of Emperors on the obverse. Coins of class i. were issued in the first century and during a considerable part of the second century. Some of the earliest pieces are dated according to the Actian Era, but the greater number bear dates of the Caesarian Era. The types principally refer to Zeus, Artemis and Apollo (Pl. xix. 4-12; xx. 1-8), the last-named being doubtless the god of the famous oracle and sanctuary situated about five miles south-west of Antioch. Ausonius (Ordo nob. urb., iii.) speaks of Phoebeae lauri domus Antiochia (cp. Pl. xix. 7). The 'Olympic' games that took place at Daphne, and the various public games for which Antioch was renowned during the Imperial age,* do not seem to have been recorded on the coins. Two types, the Tyche of the City with the Orontes (discussed below), and a running ram (Pl. xix. 8) with a crescent and star above its head, are especially characteristic of Antioch. The ram has been explained by K. O. Müller as a sign of the zodiac, indicating the period of the year at which the foundation of the city took place.†

The coinage with Imperial heads extends from Augustus to Valerian.‡ The coins are silver and bronze, and, from their uniformity of style and fabric and from the Roman character of the types, have all the appearance of products of an important

Imperial mint.* The coins are of ruder workmanship than those of the corresponding 'Imperial' coinage of Caesarea in Cappadocia, and the Roman types are limited to a very few varieties. The almost invariable type of the silver pieces is an eagle, often with a palm-branch as adjunct. On silver coins of Hadrian, M. Aurelius, &c. (Pl. xxiii. 1), the eagle holds in its talons the leg and thigh of an animal—perhaps in allusion to the foundation-legend of Antioch, according to which the site of the new city was indicated to Seleucus I. by an eagle which carried off part of a sacrificed victim to the hill Silpius.

On the bronze coins the usual reverse types are the S C in a wreath, and the name of the legatus of Syria, also placed within a wreath (Pl. xx. 9, 14). In the reign of Elagabalus the coins (bronze) are struck of a larger module, and the type of the Tyche of Antioch with the Orontes, and the bust of the Tyche, are substituted for the Roman types just mentioned.

The Tyche of Antioch and Orontes, a local type corresponding to the 'Mons Argaeus' type of Caesarea, first ^{Tyche of Antioch} occurs on coins of Tigranes, King of Armenia and the Orontes. b.c. 83—69. The Tyche seated on a rock (Mons Silpius) is draped and veiled, and wears the mural crown. On some coins of this king she holds a cornucopiae (Gardner, Cat. Seleucid Kings, pl. xxvii. 5), on others a palm-branch (Ib., pl. xxvii. 6). The Orontes swims at her feet.

The type appears at Antioch on the silver of Augustus (Pl. xx. 10; cp. Pl. xix. 4), and the goddess holds a palm-branch. On the coins of Tigranes just referred to the Orontes wears a wreath of reeds, which on the money of Augustus seems only to survive in the representation of the hair of the river-god by means of dots (Pl. xx. 13). On the silver of later Emperors the usual type is the eagle, but the Tyche and Orontes type appears under Hadrian and Commodus. On the coins of Commodus the goddess holds two ears of corn instead of the palm-branch. Under Elagabalus the type becomes prominent from its use on the bronze pieces of large module (Pl. xxiv. 11). The goddess still holds the ears of corn. A somewhat pleasing head of the Tyche also appears as a type under Severus Alexander, &c. (Pl. xxiv. 12). From Trajan Decius to Valerian the group of Tyche and Orontes is represented in a tetrastyle shrine (Pl. xxv. 12).

* Antioch was, of course, the principal mint for Syria, but Dr. Imhoof-Blumer has shown (Griech. Münzen, p. 758) that many silver and billon coins struck about the time of Caracalla, of the Antioch type and fabric, but with special symbols, were issued at various mints, chiefly in Syria and Phoenicia, e.g. Hieropolis in Cyrrhestica, Beroea, Zeugma, Aradus, Sidon, Tripolis, Tyre, Gaza.

This group has been often discussed,* and there is a general agreement that it represents the ἄγαλμα of Tyche and Orontes made by Eutychides of Sicyon, a pupil of Lysippus, and set up at Antioch soon after the foundation of the city. Copies of this work have been recognized in extant gems and metal statuettes,† but it is doubtless best reproduced in the well-known marble statue of the Vatican (Murray, Hist. of Gr. Sculpt. ii. p. 354), a statue which warrants the belief that the Τύχη Ἀντιοχείας of Eutychides was a work of grace and charm, though not, perhaps, one inspired by a lofty ideal. In the Vatican group, the Tyche holds ears of corn, symbolical, no doubt, of the wondrous fertility of the plain in which Antioch was situated. On coins of Tigranes, as we have seen, the goddess holds a palm-branch or a cornucopiae, and on Antiochian coins of Augustus a palm-branch. On the later coins she holds ears of corn, presumably as held by the original statue. The awkward pose and stiffly treated drapery of the figure on the coins of Tigranes and Augustus are in marked contrast to the Vatican copy. Some of the later coins are, however, interesting as an indication of the position in which the original statue probably stood (Pl. xxv. 12; xxvi. 4).

There existed at Antioch in the time of Trajan a group of Tyche and Orontes associated with representations of Seleucus and Antiochus engaged in crowning the goddess. This was, probably, not the original Tyche group of Eutychides,* but a reminiscence of this group of four is perhaps to be found† on a late coin of Antioch (Pl. xxiv. 13), on which two figures—the ordinary Greek Tyche and Emperor—stand beside the Tyche of Antioch, who is seated, with the Orontes at feet, and crowned by the Emperor. Pausanias (vi. 2, 7) speaks of the statue of Eutychides as μεγάλας παρὰ τῶν ἐγχωρίων ἔχον τιμάς, and the group was often repeated on the coins of Syrian cities and elsewhere.

MommSEN‡ gives the weight of the tetradrachms of Antioch as Weights. from 236 to 220 grains. The weights even of well-preserved specimens differ considerably, but this seems, judging from the coins in the British Museum, to be a fair statement of the case, at any rate for the period from Antonius and Cleopatra to Caracalla. The maximum weight of 236 grains is not often attained, but specimens do not usually fall short of 220 grains and frequently exceed 220. The pieces which weigh considerably more than 236 grains (Vespasian, 250·6 grs.; Nerva, 240·7 grs.) must be regarded as exceptional. From about the time of Caracalla the quality of the silver grows worse, and during this later period the maximum weight does not often exceed 220 grains, and many specimens occur with a weight of less than 200 grains.

Didrachms and drachms were issued under Nero, but these denominations are extremely rare. The tetradrachms of Antioch were tariffed so as to be equivalent only to three Roman denarii.*

Apamea was founded by Antigonus under the name of Pella, and Apamea. was afterwards enlarged by Seleucus Nicator, who re-named it after his wife Apama. It was situated on the Orontes, or on an affluent of that river, and was one of the principal centres of the Seleucid kingdom. Seleucus had his commissariat there, and kept there a troop of 500 elephants, a circumstance which is perhaps alluded to by the elephant-type of the coins of Apamea (Pl. xxvii. 2, 6).† Extensive ruins and remains of the Corinthian colonnades of the streets of Apamea exist at Kul'at el-Mudik. A large building near the middle of the main street contains a mutilated statue of Dionysos,‡ a divinity who appears on the coins (Pl. xxvii. 5).

 Demetrius I. Soter, and of later Syrian kings. Its civic coins are Emisa or Emesa, now Homs, on the eastern bank of the Orontes. Its coins are Imperial, beginning with the reign of Antoninus Pius,§ and the types relate almost exclusively to the worship of Elagabal, the Syrian divinity identified by the Romans with Sol and Jupiter.||

This god was worshipped under the form of a black conical stone believed to have fallen from heaven. The stone is often seen on the coins of Emisa. On Pl. xxvii. 12 (cp. Pl. xxviii. 2), it is shown in the temple of Elagabal, protected by a balustrade and shaded by

* The correctness of Mionnet's description of Imperial coins of Apamea seems open to doubt.

† The existence of the Actian era at Apamea seems doubtful, and on some of the coins the numerals appear to indicate series of issues rather than dates. Thus, no. 14 infra has the numerals (or letters) H (8) and KΛ (21). If these are dates of the Actian era, the date of this coin would be either B.C. 23 or B.C. 10. But the coin closely resembles in style and types no. 3, which was issued B.C. 75 (=A.S. 237). There is a difficulty therefore in supposing either H or KΛ to be dates of the Actian era.

two parasols. An eagle—possibly a bird sacred to Elagabal, but more probably (as on coins of Antioch) the eagle of Rome—is perched on the sacred stone, Pl. xxvii. 8, 9. This is the conventional representation of the coin-engraver, and the stone and eagle as they actually stood are, in all probability, more accurately represented on the coins of Caracalla, &c., Pl. xxvii. 12. The eagle does not here seem to be carved in relief on the stone—which, indeed, was otherwise ornamented with mysterious markings (p. 237 infra, note)—but is, as Lenormant supposes, an image of bronze or stone placed on the same base as the sacred stone, and in this way kept in constant juxtaposition with it. This stone, transported to Rome by Elagabalus, priest of the god of Emisa, is shown on the Roman coins of this Emperor and also on the coins of Uranius Antoninus.*

On the coins of the Empress Julia Domna, herself the daughter of a priest of Elagabal, an interesting representation occurs of the altar of the god, a massive structure richly decorated (Pl. xxvii. 11).

The coins of Elagabalus and of Uranius Antoninus show the stone in the temple, and no. 21 of Elagabalus commemorates ΗΛΙΑ and ΠΤΥΘΙΑ, the former being, doubtless, games celebrated in honour of Elagabal identified with Helios or Sol.†

pieces, on account of their style, fabric, date, types and countermarks, must undoubtedly be assigned to Epiphaneia in Cilicia.

Gabala, now Jebeleh, lay to the south of Laodicea ad Mare.

Gabala. Remains of its harbour and of a Roman theatre are visible. It had an autonomous coinage of the second century B.C., and issued a considerable number of Imperial coins. On the latter series the symbols of Zeus and Hermes are represented, and Athena appears.

The most important type is that of the veiled cultus-statue of a goddess, accompanied by two sphinxes (Pl. xxviii. 9, 13). It is evidently the same goddess who is represented on the coins of Augustus and Trajan, in a form less uncouth, with a sphinx at her feet (Pl. xxviii. 7, 8). Instances of the simultaneous occurrence of the archaic and the later representation of a divinity are not infrequent on Greek Imperial coins. At Perga, in Pamphylia, for instance, the ordinary Greek Artemis appears at the same time as the Oriental nature-goddess who was identified with Artemis.* On the coins of Caracalla the goddess of Gabala appears with the symbols of crescent and star, just as does the Artemis of Perga, who, moreover—it is curious to note—is sometimes accompanied by two sphinxes.† At Gabala, some native Syrian goddess, perhaps Astarte, is probably intended, but she has also attributes usually distinctive of Demeter or Persephone,‡ and her connection with Athena would seem, from the coins of L. Verus and Commodus (Pl. xxviii. 9, 10), to have been intimate.§

Laodicea ad Mare, now Ladikiyeh, north of Jebeleh (Gabala),

Mare.</sup> ranked with Antioch, Seleucia and Apamea as one of the principal cities of Syria. It was founded by Seleucus Nicator, and Malala* relates of it foundation-legends similar to those of Antioch and Seleucia. The site was indicated to the founder by an eagle depositing a piece of flesh snatched from the altar where Seleucus was sacrificing—a more exact indication was given by a boar which Seleucus encountered and slew while he was following the eagle's flight. The boar's head seen on the bronze coin, Pl. xxix. 10, perhaps refers to this incident,† and the enshrined eagle on the Imperial coins, Pl. xxx. 14, xxxi. 7, if not the eagle of Rome, is also probably the bird that indicated the site of the city.

There is a Seleucid regal coinage at Laodicea of the second century B.C., and the god Poseidon appears as a type. Strabo (xvi. pp. 751, 752) describes Laodicea as an admirably built city, with an excellent harbour.

On the tetradrachms and bronze coins of the pre-Imperial period (Pl. xxix. 3, 8) representations of the Tyche of the city prevail. Tyche is also the ordinary type of the Imperial coins (Pl. xxx. 4, 5, &c.), and it may thus be gathered that her worship at Laodicea was of more than ordinary importance.‡ In the reign of Hadrian a charming head of the goddess (Pl. xxx. 4—6) replaces the more conventional representation of earlier times. The hair is no longer veiled, but is elaborately dressed and wreathed with bunches of grapes. This decoration is significant, for Laodicea was surrounded by vineyards—χώραν τε ἔχονσα πολύουσον πρὸς τῇ ἀλλῃ εὐκαρπίᾳ,* and, in Strabo's time, furnished to Alexandria its chief supply of wine.

‡ Malala's curious story that Seleucus celebrated the foundation of Laodicea by the immolation of a virgin named Agave and afterwards erected in her honour a bronze statue of the Tyche of the new city, may be borne in mind (Babelon, Rois de Syr., p. cvii., citing Malala, p. 202-203), but it can hardly be treated as historical : see Allègre, Étude sur la déesse grecque Tyche, p. 194 f., as to similar stories in Malala, related in connection with the foundation of Antioch and of Nyssa.

The armed divinity of Pl. xxxi. 5 is doubtless Artemis Brauronia, and the type in all probability reproduces the old statue that Seleucus Nicator brought from Susa to Laodicea, and which was in existence there in the time of Pausanias.†

Remains of Larissa lie in the plain at the south and south-west of Kul'at es-Seijâr.‡ Alexandrine tetradrachms of Seleucus Nicator§ and bronze pieces of Antiochus I.|| have been attributed to this city; but, as Dr. Imhoof-Blumer¶ has pointed out, the position of Larissa, both geographically and politically, renders it unlikely that it was a regal mint, while the coins, on other grounds, seem to be better assigned to Babylon or Seleucia on the Tigris. Moreover, the symbol of a feeding horse, which occurs on these coins, is not—as has been asserted—a type or mint-mark that occurs on the undoubted autonomous coins of Larissa.

The only coins, therefore, that can be assigned to Larissa are autonomous bronze pieces of the first century b.c. These have a

M. Babelon (Perse achéménides, p. clxxxii.; cp. p. xlvi.) suggests that Myriandrus may have been a mint-place of the satrap Mazaios, B.C. 353—332.

The type of no. 3 is curious. One of the figures may be Artemis, a goddess who appears at Nicopolis on a coin of J. Mamaea.† The presence of Eros with his torch must indicate some love-scene, in which either Artemis or a local goddess or nymph assimilated to her played a part. On coins of Abydos in the Troad, representing the lovers Hero and Leander, a similar figure of Eros is introduced (Brit. Mus. Cat. Troas, p. 7, note).

A few imperial coins (Caracalla—Severus Alexander) were issued at Raphanea, with a somewhat unusual type (Pl. xxxi. 12, 13), apparently the Genius of the city (cp. the figure on imperial coins of Gaza).†

The remains of Rhosus exist at Arsús, on the Gulf of Issus.‡ It is sometimes classed among the cities of Cilicia,§ Rhosus. but the inscriptions and types of the coins render it convenient to follow the classification of it among Syrian towns hitherto adopted by numismatists.

The autonomous coins are few in number, the most interesting being a bronze piece described by Dr. Imhoof-Blumer (Monn. gr., p. 440; Choix, pl. vii. 223), showing a divinity standing between two recumbent bulls. Types of a similar character occur at other Syrian cities,|| and, no doubt, Baal or some other Syrian god is intended [see infra, under 'Dium' (Decapolis)]. The imperial coins appear to be dated according to two eras—in the time of Commodus, the Actian era, and under Sept. Severus, the Caesarian era (B.C. 48). The goddess represented on Pl. xxxii. 2 in the guise of Artemis or Selene is probably Astarte or a Syrian lunar divinity. The pilei of the Dioscuri are found on some of the coins.

Seleucia—sometimes distinguished as Seleucia Pieria—was an

Seleucia
Pieria. important city of Syria under the Seleucid kings, the port of Antioch, and a prosperous community in Roman times. It stood partly on the plain and partly on the lower slopes of the steep hill, Jebel Mûsa. The ancient city is represented by Selükîyeh, and the principal remains are those of its amphitheatre and its harbour, the latter connected with the upper part of the city by a remarkable channel excavated out of the solid rock.

Seleucia, founded by Seleucus Nicator, was a mint of the Syrian kings in the second century B.C., and during that century and the first century B.C. issued an autonomous coinage consisting of tetradrachms, drachms and bronze. The issue of silver begins soon after B.C. 108 (or B.C. 109), when the city obtained its release from Syrian rule, and the dates on the coins are apparently calculated from this era of autonomy.

The types of the autonomous and imperial coins relate almost exclusively to Zeus Keraunios and to Zeus Kasios, the latter a Semitic divinity identified with Zeus and honoured with an annual festival on the lofty mountain Kasios, south of Seleucia.*

Imperial coins, generally inscribed ZΕVC ΚΑCΙOC,† show a conical stone within a shrine or a temple (Pl. xxxii. 9; xxxiii. 3, 4, 7, 8). Lenormant* supposes this object to be an aerolith, worshipped as a personification of the god. It would seem, however, that the mountain Kasios—or rather an agalma of the mountain—is represented. An agalma of the sacred Mons Argaeus is found on some of the coins of Caesarea in Cappadocia (Pl. xii. 1, &c.), and Maximus Tyrius (Diss. viii.) says that Argaeus was ὅρος καὶ θεὸς καὶ ὄρκος καὶ ἀγαλμα. On the coins of Seleucia the conical object has a cavity in the side, which seems further to show that the representation is that of a mountain or the agalma of a mountain.

The shrine containing this sacred object is often surmounted by an eagle (Pl. xxxiii. 4), which may be either the bird of Zeus, or the bird which, according to Malala,† indicated to Seleucus Nicator the site of the future city, by carrying a morsel of flesh offered by Seleucus to Zeus on Mount Kasios to the place on the sea-shore where Seleucia was afterwards built.

A coin-type of no less importance than the stone of Zeus Kasios is that of a thunderbolt, with a fillet attached to it, which is often seen resting upon a cushion (Pl. xxxii. 6—8, 10).‡ From this it is evident that the thunderbolt was an important cultus-object at Seleucia, and it is, in fact, stated by Appian (Syr. 58) that the people of this city regarded it as an actual deity:—Φασὶ δὲ αὐτῷ τὰς Σελευκεῖς οἰκίζοντι, τὴν μὲν ἐπὶ τῇ θαλάσσῃ, διοσημίαν ἡγήσασθαι κεραυνοῦ· καὶ διὰ τοῦτο θεὸν αὐτοῖς κεραυνὸν ἔθετο· καὶ θρησκεύοντι καὶ ὑμοῦντι καὶ νῦν κεραυνόν. According to this statement, the people of Seleucia paid divine honours to the thunderbolt on account of its connection with the foundation of their city ; but we have already seen that Malala relates a different foundation-legend in connection with Seleucia, and it seems more reasonable to suppose that the thunderbolt was worshipped at Seleucia as the symbol, or the incarnation, of Zeus Keraunios, a god whose name appears in proximity to it on some of the coins (Pl. xxxiii. 6 ; p. 276, no. 56). Whether this Zeus was distinct from Zeus Kasios, or whether Keraunios and Kasios are merely epithets of one and the same god—a mountain-divinity, controlling sky and storm—it is difficult to determine, but the latter view is perhaps to be preferred.

COELE-SYRIA.

The position of Capitolias near Gadara would suggest that it should be classed with the cities of Decapolis, but Capitolias. it is mentioned by Ptolemy among the cities of Coele-Syria, and in accordance with numismatic usage its coins are here dealt with under 'Coele-Syria.'

The extensive ruins of Roman Imperial times, occupying the slopes and summits of three low hills at Beit er-Râs, are believed to mark the site of Capitolias.* The coins are Imperial—M. Aurelius to Macrinus.

(or earlier) the capital of a line of dynasts, who on their coins bear the titles of tetráρχης and ἀρχιερεὺς.

Ptolemy, son of Mennaeus (Pl. xxxiii. 11, 12), the first of these rulers who issued coins, governed Heliopolis as well as Chalcis, and possessed the valley of the Mar-syas, between Libanon and Antilibanon, and the mountainous region of Ituraea. On his death in b.c. 40 he was succeeded by his son Lysanias (Pl. xxxiv. 1), who ruled till b.c. 36, when he was put to death by M. Antonius, who gave his dominions to Cleopatra.

After the death of Cleopatra (b.c. 30), the possessions of Lysanias were farmed by his son Zenodorus (Jos. B. J. Zenodorus. i. 20, 4; Pl. xxxiv. 2), but in b.c. 24 he lost Batanea, Trachonitis and Auranitis, these regions being handed over by Augustus to Herod I. Oulatha and Paneas, however, he was allowed to retain until his death in b.c. 20.

The coins of Zenodorus are described by Eckhel (Doct. num. vet.) in his section on the Jewish Princes, but it seems better to class them, as Mr. Head does in his Historia numorum, under 'Trachonitis,' or, as in this Catalogue, with the money of the dynasts of Chalcis sub Libano, which they closely resemble.*

The ancient city of Damascus fell into the hands of Alexander the Great in b.c. 333, and was afterwards under the rule Damascus. of the Ptolemies and the Seleucidae. Its earliest coins are Alexandrine tetradrachms (Müller, nos. 1338—1346) belonging to circ. b.c. 300 and later. Their mint-symbol is a ram

* The rulers named above do not appear to have been connected with Abila Lysaniae (see Raillard in Num. Zeit., xxvi., p. 3), as has been asserted. Abila Lysaniae probably derived its name from a tetrarch Lysanias, who ruled there in the reign of Tiberius. He may, however, have been related to Lysanias, tetrarch of Chalcis (Madden, Coins of the Jews, p. 124).

(fore-part), found also as a type or symbol on some of the latest coins of Damascus. In the second and first centuries b.c. Damascus issued bronze coins with dates reckoned from the Seleucid Era.* Its Imperial coinage extends from Augustus to Philip I., when the currency becomes colonial,† and lasts till the time of Gallienus.

The prevailing types are representations of the Tyche of Damascus (see e.g. Pl. xxxiv. 9). The river Chrysoroas (Barada), which watered the fertile plain in which Damascus was situated, and the main stream of which flowed through the city, is occasionally introduced (Pl. xxxiv. 11; De Saulcy, p. 38, M. Aurelius, no. 2). On interesting coins described by De Saulcy,‡ the sources—ΠΗΓΑΙ—of the Chrysoroas and of the other river of Damascus seem to be represented near a temple, probably sacred to the river-gods.

Other types deserving of note are: the doe suckling a child (Pl. xxxv. 5); a horse and bull standing facing, with a cypress tree between them (Pl. xxxv. 6); the types relating to the local Games, ΚΕΒΑCMIA, among which is perhaps to be reckoned the curious type of Pl. xxxv. 3, showing two fighting-cocks in cages.

The bronze coins inscribed ΔΗΜΗΤΡΙΕΩΝ ΤΗΣ ΙΕΡΑΣ Demetrias. must, on account of their provenance, style, type and legends, be attributed to a town in Syria, and not to the Thessalian or Assyrian towns called Demetrias.

* Reference to Damascus as a mint of the Nabathaean kings who exercised a protectorate over the city must be reserved for the volume containing the coins of Arabia.

† If the coins described by De Saulcy, T. S., p. 43, nos. 3, 4, are rightly read, the colonial coinage had already begun under Severus Alexander. But it must be noted that the colonial coin which De Saulcy (p. 44) describes as of Julia Mamaea is in reality of Otacilia, wife of Philip I. (see infra, p. 286, no. 25).

‡ Terre Sainte, p. 42, Macrinus, no. 2; pl. ii., 8; ib., p. 47, Otacilia, no. 9; and see Cat. Gréau, p. 210, no. 2541.

Sestini,* noting the resemblance of the coins to those of Aretas III. struck at Damascus circ. 85 B.C., supposed Demetrias to be a city of Coele-Syria situated near Damascus. This very probable conjecture has been favoured by Leake and other numismatists, and receives support from the details now to be referred to, although one cannot quite reject the suspicion that Demetrias may in reality have been only a temporary name borne by Damascus. M. Babelon (Rois de Syrie, p. clxxi.) has well identified the head on coins similar to our no. 1, Pl. xxxv. 10 (Babelon, op. cit., p. 208, no. 1578; pl. xxviii. 8), as that of the Syrian king Demetrius III. Eucaerus, B.C. 95-88, to whom the foundation of Demetrias may have been due. Demetrius was by Ptolemy Lathyrus installed at Damascus as king of Coele-Syria, and on the death of Antiochus X. was for a time ruler of the whole of Syria in conjunction with his brother Philip I. Philadelphus.

Antiochus XII. Dionysos, when his brother Demetrius III. was taken prisoner by the Parthians, assumed the title of king at Damascus, and probably issued at Demetrias the coins nos. 3—5 (Pl. xxxv. 11), which I suppose to bear his head in the character of Apollo. On the death of Antiochus XII. (85 or 84 B.C.), the Nabathaean king Aretas III. was summoned by the garrison of Damascus and became king of Coele-Syria. He struck at Damascus the coins already referred to as resembling the coins of Demetrias.

The autonomous coins of Demetrias must, therefore, belong to the period B.C. 95—85-4.† The Imperial coins inscribed ΔΗΜΗ ΤΡΙΕΩΝ (Head, Hist. Num., p. 669; cp. De Saulcy, T. S., p. 58)

The coinage of the wealthy and important city of Heliopolis—now represented by the ruins of Baalbek—is colonial, and extends from the reign of Sept.
 Severus,* when the Jus Italicum was granted to the colony, to the time of Gallienus.

The principal divinity of Heliopolis was a Syrian god identified by the Greeks and Romans with Helios, or Sol, and with Jupiter.† The coins in Pl. xxxvi. 2, 6 respectively represent—as the inscription IOMH, Jovi optimo maximo Heliopolitanō, proves—the temple and propylaeum of the temple of this Jupiter Heliopolitanus. These types are apparently intended for the larger of the two chief temples extant at Baalbek, namely that which is usually known to travellers as the ‘Temple of the Sun.’ The temple on a third coin, no. xxxvi. 7, is identical in appearance with Pl. xxxvi. 2, but is not identified by the inscription IOMH. It is shown on a rocky eminence approached by a lofty staircase, and Donaldson (Architectura Numismatica, no. xxxv.) supposes (correctly?), that it represents the smaller of the two extant Baalbek temples, now known as the ‘Temple of Jupiter.’ This temple is stated to be situated on an artificial platform carried on substructions, while the temple on the coin (Pl. xxxvi. 7) is evidently built on a rock. Donaldson suggests that the soil may have accumulated in this part from the débris of the ruins and filled up a greater height than is now apparent, so that the substructions may themselves have been built over a rocky elevation.* Nos. 27, 30 commemorate the Games celebrated at Heliopolis, and several coins, as usual in Syria, represent the Tyche of the city.

The god Mēn occurs as a type.

A series of bronze coins, partly struck by the Seleucid kings, bearing the inscription ΛΑ and (in Phoenician characters) words usually interpreted as "of Laodicea, metropolis of Canaan,"§ has been attributed to this Laodicea;|| but Dr. J. Rouvier in the Revue num. for 1896, p. 265 f.; p. 377 f., has shown that these pieces probably belong to the town of Berytus under the name of 'Laodicea,' assumed between the reigns of Antiochus IV. and Alexander II. Zebina.

Pliny, in a passage in H. N. v. 28, mentions:—"Laodicensos, qui ad Libanum cognominantur, Leucadios, Lariscas on the Chrysoroas. Leucas." The Leucas of the coins is probably to be identified as the home of these Leucadii, but the town is not elsewhere mentioned in the Authors. roas (now the Barada), the river of Damascus, and the stream upon which the town of Abila—Ἄβιλα ἡ Λυσανίου, now *Sūk Wādi Barada—was also seated.

Belle, Eckhel, and De Saulcy (T. S., p. 20 f.) suppose Leucas to be identical with Abila, but, as Raillard† has shown, this identification is difficult, and the grounds for making it are very slight. It is safer, therefore, to assume that Leucas was distinct from Abila, though it must be admitted that it is curious that Leucas, which has a fairly abundant coin-series, should be almost unknown from other sources, and that Abila, though often mentioned in Josephus and elsewhere, should possess no coinage.

The coins of Leucas bearing emperors' heads extend from Claudius to Gordian III. There is a small series (De Saulcy, p. 21, nos. 1—3) without emperor's heads, but this, from the form of the legend, cannot be earlier than the time of Claudius. The coins read ΛΕΥΚΑΔΙΩΝ ΤΩΝ ΚΑΙ ΚΛΑΥΔΙΑΙΩΝ; ΚΛΑΥΔΙΕΩΝ ΤΩΝ ΚΑΙ ΛΕΥΚΑΔΙΩΝ, &c., and are dated from two eras,‡ (i.) beginning B.C. 38-7, (ii.) beginning A.D. 48. This last-named era and the legend of the coins suggest that Leucas owed its prosperity to the Emperor Claudius, who intervened actively in the disposal of territory in the Lebanon district.

TRACHONITIS.

Banias, the modern representative of Caesarea Panias, is pleasantly situated on a terrace at the base of Mount Hermon. The city—at first called Panias—formed part of the tetrarchy of Zenodorus of Chalcis [see supra ‘Chalcis sub Libano’], and at his death, in b.c. 20, was handed over to Herod the Great, who apparently changed its name to Caesarea, and built, near its celebrated grotto of Pan, a fine temple in honour of Augustus. Herod’s son, Herod Philip II., tetrarch of Trachonitis, &c., rebuilt the city and called it Caesarea Philippi, a name by which it is known in the Gospels (Matt. xvi. 13; Mark viii. 27). Agrippa II. changed the name to Neronias in honour of the emperor, but from about the time of Aurelius it was generally known (as the coins show) as Caesarea Panias, or Caesarea Augusta sub Panio.

Pellerin, followed by Eckhel (D. N. V., iii., p. 339), attributed to Caesarea Panias a series of bronze coins of Augustus with reverse C A in wreath. The older attribution of these to Caesaraugusta in

* Num. Chron., 1898, p. 246.

Spain must be wrong, as the Syrian provenance of the coins seems well made out.* Pellerin procured specimens from Syria, and, according to Boutkowski (Dict. num., p. 684), they are commonly to be met with in Beyrouth and Jerusalem. In Pellerin's view, C A should be interpreted Caesarea Augusta, and be regarded as equivalent to the inscription KAIC·CÆB that occurs on the later coins of Caesarea Panias (infra, p. 298). De Saulcy (Annuaire, iii., p. 259 f.) proposes (for reasons that do not seem to me conclusive) to assign the coins to Caesarea Arca, a town in Phoenicia, between Tripolis and Antaradus, usually said to be identical with Caesarea Libani,† though De Saulcy (op. cit., p. 271) himself considers that Caesarea Arca and Caesarea Libani were distinct places. Mr. Head has not included these coins in his Historia, and I think it is best, for the present, to leave them unattributed.

De Saulcy‡ has assigned various coins (Claudia to M. Aurelius) bearing Latin inscriptions to Caesarea Panias, but his attributions are more ingenious than convincing. The coinage that indubitably belongs to this city begins under M. Aurelius and bears inscriptions in Greek. The figure of Zeus often occurs, but the principal types relate to Pan (Pl. xxxvii. 7; De Saulcy, T. S., pl. xviii. 5, type, syrinx; ib., pl. xviii. 8, 9, 10, Pan standing, playing flute).

The Grotto of Pan at Caesarea was already known before the time of Herod, and was remarkable, says Josephus, as containing one of the sources of the river Jordan.§ This spacious cavern is now called Râs en-Neb'a, or the Fountain Head, and from its depths the water gushes forth to spread fertility over terrace and field. It is situated in the side of a perpendicular cliff 100 feet high, and three niches carved in the face of the cliff have tablets recording in Greek the consecration of the spot by a priest of Pan.* De Saulcy considers that the interesting coin in Pl. xxxvii. 7 represents the Grotto of Pan, but it must be objected that there is no indication of a rocky place, such as is usually given in reliefs of Pan and the Nymphs, and the elaborate arcade seen on the coin can hardly have formed part of the Grotto. This arcade is represented in the same way as are the arches that appear on a coin of Side in Pamphylia (Donaldson, Architect. num., p. 341), surrounding the harbour of Side, but there can be no question here of a harbour, as Leake (Num. Hell.) strangely suggests. Probably a temenos of Pan near the Grotto is intended to be represented. Within this sacred enclosure the god himself is seen, leaning, with legs crossed, against the trunk of a tree and making melody with his flute. This figure occurs on other coins of the city (figured by De Saulcy), and seems to reproduce some good original in sculpture.

ΒΗΝΩΝ, or ΓΑΒΗΝΩΝ. The epithet ΦΙΛΙΠΠ.

_{Gaba.} suggests that the town belonged to the tetrarchy of Herod Philip II., who called Caesarea Panias Caesarea Philippi. Eckhel, followed by De Saulcy (T. S., p. 339), has therefore placed Gaba in Trachonitis or Ituraea, assuming it to be identical with the Gabe of Pliny, v. 18.* The coin-types chiefly relate to the god Mēn.

DECAPOLIS.

Abila, now Abīl, a city of Decapolis situated twelve miles east of Gadara.† It is, of course, distinct from the Abila near Leucas in Coele-Syria (see supra under 'Leucas'). It issued coins from the time of M. Aurelius till the early part of the third century. A list of these is given by De Saulcy, p. 309 f., but there are no specimens in the British Museum. Some of the types relate to Herakles. The bunch of grapes on a coin of Faustina (De Saulcy, p. 310) probably refers, indirectly, to the vineyards of Abila, which is described by Eusebius‡ as πόλις οἰνοφόρος.

Antiochia ad Hippum is known under this name from coins only, but it is evidently identical with the town of Hippos mentioned in the Authors.§ On certain coins of Nero|| and Domitian¶ the name of Antioch is omitted and the legend is simply ΙΤΤΙΘΝΩΝ. De Saulcy (p. 344) conjectures that Hippos assumed the name of Antioch because it had obtained the title and rights of the city of Antioch on the Orontes. It has been identified by Schumacher and Clermont-

* Leake (Num. Hell., sup. As., p. 53) does not mention the Gabe of Pliny, but is of opinion that the coins were struck at the Gaba near Caesarea (Kaisarieh) on the coast, mentioned by Josephus (B. J., iii., 3, 1; Vit., 24).

Ganneau with a ruined site called Khurbet Súsíyeh, which lies between el-Husn and Fik on the east of the Lake of Gennesaret, two miles from the shore, and nearly opposite the town of Tiberias.*

The coins are Imperial—Nero to Commodus—and represent the Tyche of the city holding a horse (Pl. xxxviii. 1), a horse standing, a horse's head, and Pegasos.† The horse evidently alludes to the name of the city, and it may be conjectured that some foundation-legend, some story of a horse indicating the destined site, was associated with the name of the city.

Waddington,‡ followed by De Saulcy§ and other numismatists, is of opinion that the names Canata and Canatha, ^{Canata or} ^{Canatha.} met with on coins as well as in the Authors and in inscriptions, represent two distinct places in the Hauran—Canata being the modern Kerak, about 20 miles north-west of Bostra, and Canatha, Kunawât, about 20 miles north-east of Bostra. The opinion of Mordtmann,|| however, seems preferable, according to which Canata and Canatha are merely variations in the spelling of the name of a single town whose numerous and varied remains are to be met with at Kunawât.

The coinage begins under Claudius, the inscription being KANATHNΩΝ: from the time of Commodus¶ the form KANAΘ (KANAΘHN. .) occurs, accompanied by the word ΓΑΒΕΙΝ.

¶ The coin assigned by De Saulcy (p. 400) to Antoninus Pius, is probably of Commodus: Reichardt, Num. Zeitschrift, xii. (1880), p. 71.

Reichardt,* who gives a list of the coins, rightly refers this latter inscription to Aulus Gabinius, the well-known Proconsul of Syria. Yet ΓΑΒΕΙΝ can hardly be, as Reichardt says, the name of Gabinius, but must be an epithet of Canata, and we may suppose that the city assumed the title of Gabinia on account of some benefit or some constitutional change that it had experienced at the hands of Gabinius during his term of office.

The era employed on the coins is the Pompeian, b.c. 64. On the earlier specimens, the type is the Tyche of the city; on the later, a head of Athena, Dionysos standing, the Tyche of the city, and a head of Zeus. The last-named must be the Zεὺς μέγιστος mentioned in inscriptions of the place.†

Dium was a town near Pella, founded, according to Steph. Byz., by Alexander the Great. De Saulcy‡ is inclined ^{Diam.} to place it at Kefr-Abil, two or three leagues east of Pella, but later topographers suppose that the ancient ruins at the village of Eidun, near El-Husn, are those of Dium.§

According to Josephus, Dium was one of the cities taken from the Jews and restored to its original inhabitants by Pompey; on its coins, which belong solely to the time of Caracalla and Geta, it uses the Pompeian era.

The interesting type of Pl. xxxviii. 4 must be compared with the type of a draped male divinity that occurs on other Syrian coins; at Rhosus (Imhoof-Blumer, Monn. gr., p. 440; Choix, pl. vii. 223); at Hieropolis in Cyrrhestica (Imhoof-Blumer, Griech. Münzen, p. 759, no. 772; ib. no. 773; pl. xiv. 7); and on tetradrachms of Antiochus XII. (Imhoof-Blumer, Monn. gr., p. 437, no. 121; Babelon, Rois de Syr., p. clxxiii.; Num. Chron., 1890, p. 328).* The costume and attributes of the divinity represented on these coins vary, but in each case the divinity (or the statue of the divinity) is placed between two bulls. At Hieropolis the figure can be identified with Baal Kevan, and, here, at Dium, and on the other coins referred to, some form of Baal is probably represented. At Dium the figure has the attributes of Zeus (Nike, and eagle-headed sceptre); at Rhosus he holds in one hand the fulmen. The Baal Kevan of Hieropolis is in the De dea Syria described as Zeus.

The divinity of Dium wears a modius, as does the Baal Kevan of Hieropolis. At Rhosus the figure has a head-dress in the form of the crux ansata, but it is to be noted that he is horned, just as he is at Dium. The horns have, no doubt, something to do with the bulls that are represented in such close connection with the divinity.

The ruins of Gadara, now called Umm Keis,† cover a hill on the south side of the Hieromax, about six miles southeast of the Sea of Galilee. Its hot springs, celebrated in antiquity, are about two miles and a half north of the ruins.

In the second century B.C. Gadara was in the hands of the Seleucids, but it was taken from them by Alexander Jannaeus early in his reign (B.C. 105-79). It was destroyed by the Jews during the civil war between Aristobulus and Hyrcanus, but was rebuilt by Pompey, circ. B.C. 63, and made a free city. The memoria originum so far prevailed with the Gadarenes that in the reign of Antoninus Pius, and later, they called themselves on their coins 'Pompeians,' and made use of the Pompeian Era.

* Cp. also Imhoof-Blumer, Journ. Hell. Stud., 1898, p. 170 f., remarks on nos. 26-27.

† Sir Charles Wilson, art. 'Gadara' in Smith's Dict. of the Bible.

Sestini* describes an autonomous bronze coin of Gadara of 'year 8' = B.C. 56, but I am inclined to suspect that this date is wrongly read, inasmuch as the reverse type of the coin (two cornuacopiae in saltire) is at Gadara prevalent in Imperial times, e.g. on the coins of Titus and Nero.

The Imperial coinage extends from Augustus to Gordian III. The types relate to the Tyche of the city, to Herakles, and to Zeus, who is represented in a temple.†

On the coins of Caracalla, Elagabalus, and Gordian III. (De Saulcy, pl. xv. 9, 10, 11), a galley with rowers is seen. A Gadarene coin of M. Aurelius with the same type has the words ΓΑΔΑΡΕΩΝ ΝΑΥΜΑ written above the galley, and this inscription, if it has not been tampered with,‡ shows that these galley-types relate to a ναυμαχία, perhaps a local contest held in one of the two theatres of the place, or possibly on the Sea of Galilee.

Gadara was a city of Decapolis, and lay in a district called Gadaritis, the χώρα or περίχωρος τῶν Γαδαρηνῶν mentioned in the Gospels as the scene of the healing of a demoniac, and the destruction of the herd of swine. It is well known that the manuscripts of the Synoptic accounts of the incident (Matt. viii. 28-34; Mark v. 1-18; Luke viii. 26-40) present a curious diversity as to the name of the locality. In each Gospel there is manuscript

* See De Saulcy, T. S., p. 294.

† See also a curious type, male figure between two lions (De Saulcy, T. S., p. 303, no. 8).

‡ De Saulcy (p. 299, no. 2), who describes this coin from the original in the Cabinet de France, remarks "cette pièce a évidemment été retouchée." Mionnet, who had previously described the specimen (v., p. 326, no. 38) makes no comment on its condition. So far as I can judge from Mionnet's sulphur cast, the only part of the coin that can have been 'retouched' is the reverse legend, especially the word NAYMA.

evidence for the three readings, Γαδαρηῶν, Τεργεστηῶν, Τεραστηῶν. The best reading in Matthew's Gospel appears to be Γαδαρηῶν; in Mark, Τεραστηῶν; in Luke, Τερασηῶν. With regard to Τερασηῶν, it seems clear that however preferable it may be as the reading in Mark and Luke, it is wrong as a statement of fact, seeing that Gerasa (see infra) was about 35 miles from the Sea of Galilee, and the narrative demands a town or district near the Sea. According to Sir Charles Wilson,* the only locality near the Sea that fulfils the requirements of the miracle is a place on its eastern shore called Kersa, where there are ruins of a town which may have been the ancient Gergesa, a town known to have been situated somewhere on the lake.

The town of Gadara—six miles from the lake—is excluded by its position, but it has been suggested that “the country of the Gadarenes” extended as far as Kersa, and that thus the miracle may have taken place at Gergesa, and, at the same time, within the district of the Gadarenes. Sir Charles Wilson, however, greatly doubts whether the territory of Gadara extended so far north as Gergesa, especially as the district of Hippus (Susiyeh) intervened.

Gergesa (probably in Gaulonitis) therefore remains as the most likely scene of the miracle. Of this town no coins are known.

The site of Gerasa, a city in the uplands of Gilead, 18 miles east of the Jordan, is at the modern Jerash, where Gerasa. are extensive and important remains, chiefly of the Antonine period. It is first mentioned by Josephus, circ. B.C. 85, as a strong town taken by assault by Alexander Jannaeus.

It issued Imperial coins from Hadrian to Severus Alexander,† the types of which relate to the Greek Artemis, regarded as the Týche of the city, ΑΡΤΕΜΙC ΤΥΧΗ ΓΕΡΑCΩΝ. On some specimens (De Saulcy, pl. xxii. 1) the bust of the goddess rests on a crescent. The principal temple at Gerasa was dedicated to the Sun.

The “Country of the Gerasenes” has been referred to under ‘Gadara’ supra.

Dr. Imhoof-Blumer has published* two interesting Imperial coins with Tyche as reverse type and the legend ΑΝ. ΤΩ ΠΠ. ΧΡ. ΤΩ ΠΠ. ΓΕ. He completes this as Ἄντιοχέων τῶν πρὸς Χρυσοράτην πρὸς Γεράσους, comparing it with an inscription found at Gerasa, which mentions the Ἀντιοχεῖς οἱ πρὸς τῷ Χρυσοράτῃ. Antiochia on the Chrysoroas may be identical with Gerasa, or possibly was a town in the neighbourhood of Gerasa.

Pella, now Fahil (Tubukat el-Fahil), about twenty miles south of the Sea of Galilee. The few Imperial coins attributed to it are enumerated by De Saulcy, p. 292 f.

The extensive remains of Philadelphia, now Amman, lie in a quiet valley hemmed in by hills, about 22 miles east of the Jordan near the Jabbok. The place is the Rabbath-Ammon, or Rabbah, of the Old Testament, the ancient capital of the Ammonites. Stephanus Byz. (s.v. Φιλαδέλφεια) says that it was first called Ἄμμαρα, then Αστάρτη,† and afterwards Φιλαδέλφεια. The last name was given to it when in the third century B.C. it was rebuilt by Ptolemy Philadelphus.

Some of the coins that have been assigned to Philadelphia (cp. De Saulcy, T. S., p. 386 ff.) are imperfectly described or belong to the Lydian Philadelphia. The coins that are undoubtedly of the place first appear in the time of Hadrian, and are inscribed ΦΙΛΑΔΕΛΦΕΩΝ with the addition of ΚΟΙΛΗΣ ΚΥΠΙΑΚ (often abbreviated).*

The most important types relate to Herakles : see the bust on the coin in De Saulcy, op. cit., Pl. xxii. 7, and the interesting chariot of Herakles—ΗΡΑΚΛΕΙΟΝ ΑΡΜΑ represented on Pl. xxxviii. 9 (p. 306, no. 1 infra), which is evidently a car employed in festal processions to carry the image of the god or some sacred object connected with his cultus.† The car that is often seen on coins of Sidon (Gardner, Types, Pl. xv. 2) and the ΙΕΡΑ ΑΤΤΗΜΗ (ἀπήνη) of Ephesian coins (Head, Brit. Mus. Cat. Ionia, Pl. xiv. 11)‡ are parallel types.

It has been conjectured that the worship of Herakles at Philadelphia replaced the ancient cultus of Moloch that prevailed at Rabbath-Ammon. This seems highly probable : it is, at any rate, nearly certain that the Herakles worshipped at Philadelphia was the Tyrian Herakles, for we find on Pl. xxxviii. 10 a representation of Asteria (ΘΕΑ ΑΓΤΕΠΙΑ), who, according to some accounts (Cic. N. D. 3, 16), was the mother of the Tyrian Herakles.§

* Pliny mentions Philadelphia among the towns of Decapolis : on the extended use of the term Coele-Syria, see Le Bas-Waddington, Voyage, Inscr. iii., pt. 1, p. 535, col. 1.

* Cp. C. I. G., no. 4012:—Ἡ βουλὴ κ(αὶ) δ δῆμος τῆς μητροπόλεως Ἀγκύρας.

† The anchor is a symbol of Ancyra (cp. coin of Caracalla, no. 32 infra). The name of the town, by a mistaken etymology, was connected with the Greek word ἄγκυρα, and various fanciful stories were told as to the origin of the town-name: see Paus., i. 4 (the finding by Midas of an anchor on the original site of the place), and Steph. Byz., s.v. Ἄγκυρα (the victorious Galatae robbing the Egyptians of their anchors).

6	63·3		, ΙΒ; , Μ Κ	12

* This coin is not barbarous in style (as is no. 9 below), but the inscription would appear to be the work of an engraver's ignorant apprentice. This inscription runs:—ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΑΙΓΑΛΕΟΥ ΦΙΛΟΜΗΤΙΣ, and each word is written between two lines, which have presumably been ruled by the workman for his guidance. The coin is in good condition, and the weight (56·8 grains) is therefore somewhat light.

* The horn of Zeus Ammon does not appear on this coin, and the head is bound with a taenia. In the line of the inscription, between the words ΔΗΜΑΡΧΙ and ΕΣΟΥΥC, is a broad plain band, presumably produced by an incision in the die made by the engraver in order to erase some mistake in the lettering. The coin was formerly in the collection of the Duke of Devonshire.

* A coin with similar types is in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris, but its reverse type—owing no doubt to its being in poor condition—has been incorrectly described (Babelon, Rois de Syrie, p. 212, no. 7; pl. xxix. 7) as Nike, a goddess who occurs on another bronze coin of Xerxes: op. Babelon, loc. cit., no. 6.

* Another specimen is in the Berlin Museum, with ΦΙΛΟ as the third word of the inscription, which Blan has suggested should be completed as ΦΙΛΟ(πάτορος). The coin has been attributed to the Mithradates mentioned by Polybius, xxvi. 6, 11, as satrap of Lesser Armenia circ. B.C. 170 (see Babelon, Rois de Syrie, p. ccxii., cp. Blan in Zeit für Num. vii. (1880) p. 37). M. Th. Reinach, however (Rerue des études grecques, 1890, pp. 374, 375), completes the ΦΙΛΟ as ΦΙΛΟ(ρωμαίου), and suggests that the coin should be attributed to the king Mithradates—Βασιλ[έα Μ.]θραδάτην [φιλέλληνα] καὶ φιλορ[μαῖον]—mentioned in a Commagenian inscription from Nemroud-Dagh. According to Reinach's view, this Mithradates was the eldest son of Mithradates I. Callinicus, King of Commagene, and would have flourished circ. B.C. 92.

† Numerals from Α to Θ are found on the coins of Antoninus Pius, and other numerals (up to Δ) occur on coins of M. Aurelius, L. Verus, Commodus and Sept. Severus. Possibly these numerals indicate years of the Emperor's reign; in which case the issue must have been confined to the early years of the Emperors. It is, perhaps, a preferable view that they represent successive numbered issues, and not dates. Cp. the numerals on coins of Doliche, and Germanicia Caesarea, supra.

* Eckhel (Doct. num. vet., iii., 274) explains the inscription and type as follows:—"Caesari Augusto pontifici maximo ob susceptum pontificatum max. coronam Autiocheni dedicaverunt." Augustus became Pontifex Maximus in B.C. 12, and the date of this coin is B.C. 5. If Eckhel's explanation is correct, an interval of some years elapsed before the assumption of the Pontificate was commemorated on the coins of Antioch. Prof. W. M. Ramsay, in commenting on the improbability of such an interval being allowed to elapse, has suggested to me that the type was first adopted on an occasion (not recorded in literature) when Augustus accepted from the people of Antioch the local title of ἀρχιερέος. A special wreath was worn by the ἀρχιερέος, and it is no doubt this wreath that is represented on the reverse of the coin. (Cp. Ramsay, Cities and Bishoprics of Thrygia, 1895, p. 56 f.).

* This piece, purchased of M. Hoffmann of Paris in 1861 (=Froehner, Annuaire de la soc. franc. de num., x., 1886, p. 192, no. 7b), resembles the billon coins struck by Uranius Antoninus at Emisa (inscribed EMICA: see infra, 'Emisa.' M. Froehner (op. cit., p. 192; p. 202) is of opinion that it was likewise struck at Emisa, as the historians do not state that Uranius held possession of Antioch. But the notices of this Emperor are confused, and, in part, contradictory of the testimony of the coins, and little stress can be laid upon their silence respecting this point. This coin differs in several small details from that struck at Emisa, and at the same time closely resembles the Antioch coins of the period, and, like them, bears no name of the minting city. I am inclined to attribute it to the Antioch mint, though the possibility of its having been struck at Emisa, in imitation of the Antiochene coinage, is not to be overlooked.

This specimen was formerly in the collection of James Millingen, and is published in his Sylloge (1827), p. 80; pl. iv. 59. He describes the obverse type as a "radiated head, probably of Antiochus IV. Epiphanes," but this side of the coin is in poor condition.
† If these letters represent a date, which seems somewhat doubtful, the coin would be of the year 205, equivalent (on the supposition that the Era begins B.C. 47) to A.D. 158 (Antoninus Pius).
‡ Either ΔΜ or ΘΝ indicate a date. ΔΜ (44) would (according to an Era beginning B.C. 47) be equivalent to B.C. 3; ΘΝ (59) would be equivalent to A.D. 12.

* Cp. Imhoof-Blumer, Zur griech. Münzkunde (Genf, 1898), p. 48, no. 6 and p. 49. Imhoof reads "... ΙΡΗΛ(?)", but thinks that the word cannot be completed as ΑΒΡΗΛ_{Ιανῶν}.

† The reverse inscription might possibly be read [A]VΓΔΟΜ ΝΑ, &c., but Imhoof's reading (op. cit., p. 48, no. 5) here followed seems preferable. Another coin of Sept. Severus and Domna (Imhoof, op. cit., p. 47, no. 4) has the date HNV (year 458). Imhoof has well shown (op. cit., p. 46 f.) that all the coins of Paltos are dated from an Era beginning (as at Aradus) in the autumn of B.C. 259 or 258 ('458'=A.D. 200). Mionnet read the ΕΓ following ΔΟΜΝΑ (on no. 2) as ΕΤ (year "305"), but the letters are ΕΓ, whatever be their meaning. Two Eras, (i.) B.C. 239, (ii.) B.C. 97—81, were formerly supposed to be used on the coins of Paltos, but Imhoof has shown that these Eras rest only on the evidence of mis-read specimens.

* This coin was acquired in 1882 of M. Clermont-Ganneau, together with more than twenty other coins, all of Judaea. At that time it was classed in the Museum trays to Archelaus, a supposed dynast of Chalcis, and Mr. Head has, with hesitation, followed this attribution in his Hist. Num., p. 655. But Archelaus would be known only from this specimen, and no ancient author mentions a ruler at Chalcis of that name. As the coin closely resembles the coins of Ptolemy (nos. 3, 4) I have assigned it to his reign, suggesting that APXE is an engraver's blunder for APXIE(pewz). A similar blunder occurs on nos. 3, 4, APXIIEP for APXIEP (cp. also Imhoof-Blumer, Porträtköpfe, p. 44, note 70, correcting De Saulcy).

* Year '87.' Mionnet (v., p. 576 and Sup. viii., p. 381) described coins with the years '280,' '281' and '282,' but it is doubtful if these readings can be relied on. A similar coin described by De Saulcy (Annuaire de la soc. franc. de num., v., p. 183) has the date '87.' The coin must have been struck between the beginning of the reign of Zenodorus (B.C. 30) and B.C. 27, the year in which Octavian (Νέος Καῖσαρ) assumed the title of Augustus. '87' added to these dates will give an Era commencing either in B.C. 117 or in B.C. 114. See Eckhel, D. N. V., iii., 497; Madden, Coins of the Jews, p. 124, note.

[Northwick.] [Pl. xxxv. 4.]

* Cp. a gem in the Berlin Museum (Imhoof-Blumer and Keller, Tier- und Pflanzen-Bilder, Pl. xvi. 12) showing a bear emerging from his cage.

† De Saulcy (p. 50, no. 1) curiously says "elle tient de la main droite un lièvre par les oreilles." An almost identical object is held by the Tyche on coins of Geta (supra, no. 19; pl. xxxiv. 10; De Saulcy, p. 41; pl. ii. 7) and Macrinus (De Saulcy, p. 41), but it can hardly be "un poisson(?) as De Saulcy suggests. The object seems to bear most resemblance to a club.

Pliny (v. 16), followed by Eckhel and other numismatists, places Gadara among the cities of Decapolis; Stephanus Byz. describes it as πόλις κοιλης Συρίας. Eckhel explains I·A·A· as ΙΕΡΑC ΑCYΛΟY AYTOMOY but offers no satisfactory explanation of Γ.
