¹ Stater Class. The gold coinage allowed by special privilege of the Roman Emperors lasted until 124 A.D. Electrum was used in the reigns of Rhescuporis III (see No. 7396), Cotys III and Sauromates III, the staters next degenerating into base metal and eventually, in the reign of Thothorses, into bronze. Through the successive stages they retain their homogeneity of design and bear the date of the year of issue according to the Pontic era beginning in October, 297 B.C.

¹ With slightly different reading on the obverse. There is a specimen in Hirsch Catalogue, XIII. No. 3239. These coins are not noticed in Recueil Général , Vol. I. Pt. 1 ² , p. 197, where three types of coins of M. Aurelius and L. Verus (not including No. 7416) are all that are allowed for this place which is thought to be another name for Pompeiopolis. I adhere to Mionnet's identification because the ethnic form ΣΕΒΑΣΤΗ seems to point to a connection with the coins inscribed ΣΕΒΑΣΤΗΜΗΤΡ·ΠΑΦ (Recueil, l.c.) rather than to such towns as e.g. the Phrygian Sebaste where the ethnic is apparently always ΣΕΒΑΣΤΗΝΩΝ .

³ The head does not resemble that of either Maximinus or Maximus. I once thought that the letters ΜΑ were blundered and that the coin was of Alexander Severus, but the run of the letters around to r. is against such a reading. The name of the strategos on the reverse occurs on coins of both these emperors and also on coins of Caracalla (Mionnet, v. Supp., p. 281, 28, p. 283, 37, and p. 284, 41) and the reverse type is described, with Nike on the r. hand, on a coin of Adramyteum of Caracalla and on another of the time of Gordian by Imhoof-Blumer, Kleinasiatische Münzen, p. 11, 6 and p. 12, 9. On the latter coin there is a cup in the r. hand, and this may be the object described above as uncertain.

¹ This coin gives the name ΣΤΡΑΕΠΙΔΟΥ, the other two coins the type, though the Hirsch Catalogue coin no doubt read this name and not ΣΤΡΑ ΕΠΙΔΟΥ as there recorded with a query.

² Slight traces after ΣΤΡΑ of letters not inconsistent with the ΤΑΡ of the Hirsch Catalogue coin. Mionnet, v. Supp., p. 355, 473, reads ΣΤΡ·ΚΟ·ΠΑΥΛΟΥ, and p. 356, 482 ΣΤΡΑ·ΤΑΡ·ΠΟΥΛΟΥ on coins of different types. Münsterberg, Num. Zeit. 1914, p. 47, recognizes Αἰλ and ταρ (καίριος?) Παῦλος for Cyzicus.

³ The nearest description of the type, but without a magistrate's name. Cp., however, Mionnet, ibid. No. 470 and Nos. 467-9.

MILETUS
Numerous electrum coins of very early date are, for various reasons, assigned to Miletus where the coinage of money must have begun very soon after its invention by the Lydians¹. The attribution of No. 8202 to Miletus is uncertain. Nos. 8203-4 were formerly attributed to the Lydians. The types of No. 8205 suggest that it is of comparatively late date and contemporary with the silver of the fifth century B.C.

				¹ The type of the incuse exactly resembles that of the two heavier coins figured in the Traité , Pl. XI. 10-11, which, with a weight of 1.76 grammes, are described by Babelon as Milesian hemidrachms. His No. 12, with a rather different reverse, weighs .76 gr. and is described as a Milesian trihemiobol. ² I have not been able to find descriptions of this piece. ³ This coin cannot be differentiated from the twelfths of the preceding period on grounds of style. Babelon, however, divides these small pieces into two groups according to their weights. See Traité , Part II. Vol. I. p. 269, note after Nos. 428-431. See also Part II. Vol. II. p. 1050, where Babelon regards the weight-standard of the hemidrachm as Attic, that of the diobol as Milesian. There seems to be a slight discrepancy between the views advanced by Gardner, History of Ancient Coinage , p. 101 and p. 257.

Vol. II. pp. 1143-6. The reverse types of the coins there described (1979-90) are the types of such places as Miletus, Samos, Parium and Lampsacus, and Babelon considered that they point to an alliance between these towns. His No. 1979 reads ΚΑΑ (reverse type, head of ram) and he assigns the whole group to Clazomense. He considered the standard to be Attic, somewhat reduced. Cp. Gardner, History of Ancient Coinage, p. 258, and p. 100 where the earlier series of Clazomenae with the plain incuse square reverse is assigned to the period of the Ionian revolt. As the drachms described above are exactly the right weight for drachms of the Samian standard, and since the form of the dotted

² The bull would, then, seem to be depicted as swimming over the sea and the figure may be Europa rather than Aphrodite. See Hill, B.M. Cat. Cyprus, Intr. at top of p. lix.

The sacred stone ¹ BZP i.e. year 162 of the Pharsalian Era beginning 48 B.C. ² Occurs as a type on earlier coins (B.M. Cat. p. 249, 21). The usual countermark is a small male head. ³ Following a suggestion made by the late Dr Imhoof-Blumer, who knew this coin from a very poor specimen which he had been inclined to attribute to Emisa, Mr Hill read ΛΑΟΔΙΚΙΑC on this specimen and identified the standing figure with the armed goddess shown on Laodiceian coins of Philip I. Some of the letters, especially Κ, are not clear, but this reading certainly seems correct though the form of the ethnic seems unique. The designation ΚΟΛΩΝΕΙΑC does not seem to occur on coins with Greek inscriptions, though COL appears as a countermark in the time of Commodus and the inscription, e.g. COLON METROP on coins of Caracalla. In the coin here described the side with the baitulos is technically the reverse. Dr Imhoof-Blumer thought that he could read ΜΗΤΡΟΠΟΛΕΩC on his specimen and says in a letter that the baitulos is decorated with an eagle. ⁴ The U perhaps the remains of the numeral Β

				¹ The letters are all legible but rather coarsely cut so that the exact shape is not always certain. I have not seen this coin described elsewhere. ² With the extension of Bactrian power into India under Euthydemus and Demetrius it appears that several families of Greek princes ruled in India contemporaneously and their dates and order of succession have not yet been established (Head, Hist. ¹ Ascribed to Ptolemy IV as belonging to a series on which the letters ΔΙ occur. Coins with the cornucopiae but without ΔΙ are given by Svoronos (p. 156, 1004) to Ptolemy III.

² Probably holding some object but apparently not a pomegranate as Svoronos conjectures. The hand seems too far away to be holding a portion of the drapery as described in the British Museum Catalogue (p. 52, 57-62) where the figure is described as a "City... on advancing prow."

See Head, Hist. Num.² p. 847. ² Head's remark, Hist. Num.² at the foot of p. 851, "Their style suggests a later date, but possibly its peculiarities are local" is no doubt intended to apply to tetradrachms of dates later than 42-50. Where these coins were struck is uncertain, but Svoronos (Text, p. σξϵ) suggests Cyprus. Allowing for local peculiarities (note particularly the eagle's head and eye and the marked lotiform ends of the thunderbolt in each case well on the flan) I find it very difficult to believe that the head on the obverses of Nos. 9792-5 represents Ptolemy I, though he is clearly portrayed on Nos. 9796-8.

¹ I do not notice a similar piece described by Svoronos. ² The portrait on Svoronos, Pl. XLI. 30, is identified by him as that of Ptolemy V. No. 9811 above seems more to resemble Ptolemy III as figured on the gold octadrachm, No. 9783 above. ³ For the portrait on his No. 1795 Svoronos hesitates between Ptolemy IV and Ptolemy V. Perhaps No. 9812 more closely resembles his No. 1799 where he supposes that Ptolemy VI is represented. See also Macdonald, Hunter Catalogue, Vol. III. p. 397, 11-14, and B.M. Cat. Ptolemies, p. 99, 134-140. There are coins with the Dionysiac type of considerably later style. See also Svoronos, Text, p. 768.

¹ Perhaps merely an attempt to pierce the coin; there is an irregular depression on the obverse. ² See Head, Hist. Num. ² p. 858. ³ But not certainly struck in Cyprus, as ΠΑ at some time in this late period was put on coins struck at Alexandria. ⁴ I cannot find a parallel. It does not seem possible to call the portrait that of Ptolemy I. The style of the reverses including some details of the poor lettering seems to connect Nos. 9831 and 9832.

¹ See Head, Hist. Num. p. 858. These coins can be safely attributed, owing to the double system of dating by regnal years, to Cleopatra III and Ptolemy XI, the former counting, as in the case of Ptolemy X, from the death of Ptolemy VIII in 116 B.C. and the latter from his appointment as governor of Cyprus in 114 B.C.

Thus there would be no break in the series with the headdress. Head, Hist. Num.² p. 859, agrees. ² Compare the head on the obverse of No. 9843 with B.M. Cat. Pl. xxix. 2.
